VENETIANS DISCUSSED BY WOMEN'S CLUB

"The Venetians; Their Industries and Minor Arts," was the subject of an interesting paper prepared by Mrs. Duncan W. Taylor and read by Mrs. Robert Lowry at the meeting of the Monday Afternoon Club held yesterday at the Casino. A discussion of interest followed. The paper was preceded by current events given by a number of members.

Mrs. Henry M. Maxson, the president of the club, and Mrs. Gates Willard, one of the vice-presidents, were appointed delegates to the Pure Food conference held by the officers of the Consumers' League this afternoon and evening in the Presbyterian church, Cranford.

The next meeting of the club will be held Monday, December 9, a change having been made from the usual time.

FINANCIAL REPORTS OF CITY BOARD OF EDUCATION

Routine business occupied the time of the Plainfield Board of Education at the regular December meeting in the city high school last night. The usual budget of bills was ordered paid and the tax collector's report showed $7,083.12 of school money collected. The first payment of the State school appropriation, received from the State superintendent of schools, was acknowledged. It amounts to $10,083.34. The report of the custodian of schools showed a balance of $2,860.87. This is a small balance, but the board has had to use $10,000 of it in paying notes.

The report of Dr. T. H. Tomlinson and Dr. A. F. Van Horn, medical inspectors of the local schools, showed that 764 children have been personally examined during the month of November. Superintendent Maxson reported that the local school exhibit at the Jamestown exposition had been awarded a silver medal—the highest award for school work. The question of sewer assessments in the local schools was brought up by the finance committee, and Floyd T. Woodhull was appointed a committee of one to confer with Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh about the matter of this tax, and he will also determine the valuation of the new city high school building necessary for determining the real estate valuation of the local schools.

After adjournment, several of the members of the board stayed to hear the new tel-electric piano player, recently purchased by the school. Principal Ira W. Travell exhibited the instrument.

INDEPENDENT GUN CLUB BEGINS SEASON'S SHOOTING

Rifle range and trap shooting contests open to members of the Independent Gun Club began Thanksgiving Day, when about a dozen members turned out for shooting at the rifle range. The days honors were carried off by George A. Strong, who got a perfect score, making thirty targets out of a possible thirty on the range. Dr. C. W. Leonard scored 29 and Henry Haurand had 28 out of thirty. This is considered exceptionally good shooting, and the contest promises to be close this season for there are about half a dozen crack shots who are planning to take part in all the holiday shoots. At the traps there were only about half a dozen out, and no records were submitted.

Club members will meet for the prize shooting all holidays at the club ranges. The seasons shoot, for which prizes will be awarded, opened Thanksgiving Day and the next shoot will be held New Years Day. The contest will end with the shooting on Independence Day. There will be a meeting of the club members next Monday evening to elect officers and discuss plans for the year.

Through the efforts of some of the members of the club, a 25-yard practise range has been fitted up at the old oil cloth factory, at North avenue and Richmond street. Here the members who are to take part in the rifle shooting for prizes may meet for practise, and it is announced that prizes will be given for the best scores at this short range each week.

Will Tell About River Nile.

Charles W. McCutchen has offered to give his superb illustrated lecture on "The River Nile," for the benefit of Faith chapel building fund. The lecture will be given at the Y. M. C. A. on Friday night, December 13. Mr. McCutchen has a large number of exceptionally fine views and having taken the trip along the River Nile is well versed with all the interesting points on that journey.

SONS OF VETERANS' FAIR

ENTERTAINMENT IS PROVIDED.

Councilman Edward P. T. Smith Chairman—G. A. R. Reunion Tonight—Music a Feature.

Under the auspices of John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, the first annual fair was opened in Co. K armory last night. There was a large attendance and liberal patronage was accorded the various booths, while the dancing was not the least of the enjoyable features. During the evening one of the members, James Stryker, gave an exhibition of fancy roller skating. Special effort has been made to decorate the hall in an attractive manner and the committee of which Edward P. T. Smith is the chairman, assisted by a number of women, succeeded admirably.

The fancy booth, decorated in purple and white, was in charge of members of the Women's Relief Corps, including Mrs. Sadie Baglin, Miss May E. Howlett, Mrs. Hattie Kirch, Miss Clara Barton Smith and Mrs. William Jonson. The booth devoted to groceies and vegetables, decorated in green and white, was in charge of Mrs. Charles Thompson, and Mrs. Hattie Gibbons, representing the Union Veteran Union Auxiliary. Woman from the same organization were in charge of the candy booth, the decorations being red and white. Mrs. Frank Townley, Miss May Smith and Mss Ethel Lorton being members of the committee. Mrs. Sarah Mattox and Mrs. Andrew Cox, of the Women's Relief Corps, were at the refreshment booth. Frank Townley looked after the cane booth, and Oliver Pierson is in charge of the cloak room. Those assisting Chairman Smith are Victor Lorton, Oliver Pierson, James Stryker, Frank Townley and Raymond McVoy.

Among the special attractions at the fair are a handsome velvet quilt made by Mrs. William Hand, and donated to the Sons of Veterans, a large picture donated by Hahne & Co., of Newark; a suit of clothes donated by Weinberger, the clothier, and a pair of shoes donated by Morris Van Arsdale, the shoe dealer.

The music for dancing is being furnished by Naylor's orchestra of five pieces and this is a popular form of diversion for the patrons of the fair, which will be continued every night this week. Tonight will be known as "G. A. R. Night," and members of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., of this city, as well as Sons of Veterans from all parts of the State will attend as guests of the local camp.

EPISCOPAL CLERICUS AT HOLY CROSS CHURCH

Episcopal clergy from this city, Elizabeth, Somerville, Rahway, Bound Brook, Westfield and other near by towns were entertained at luncheon at Holy Cross parish house today on the occasion of the annual meeting of the local clericus. Covers were laid for fifteen at the luncheon served by members of the entertainment committee of the women's guild of Holy Cross parish, and the guests included Bishop-elect E. J. Knight, of the Western Colorado diocese; Rector-Emeritus Erskine M. Rodman, of Grace church; Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, of Grace church; Rev. William H. Neilson, Rev. William Mulford, of Fanwood; Rev. Charles T. Fisk, of Somerville; Rev. A. S. Phelps, of Bound Brook; Rev. Henry H. Sleeper, of Elizabeth; Rev. Chas. Cooder, of Rahway, and the rector of Holy Cross church, Rev. George A. Warner.

Enjoyed a Box Party.

In recognition of their efforts to write up new business in the district, Superintendent S. J. Robinson, of the local branch of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, tendered a box party to his agents at the New Plainfield theatre last night. Those who enjoyed the performance beside Mr. Robinson were John Manley, Edward Skinner, Peter Uhdal, Abram Arensburg, John Elliott and John Naylor.

DISASTER TO COMMERCE

Cancellation of Rate Agreement with Jersey Central Means Much.

NEW HAVEN'S ULTIMATUM.

Manufacturers Alarmed Over Impending Freeze-Out—Channels of Communication to Be Closed.

What the notice of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad with regard to cancellation of their rates with the Jersey Central, Reading, Baltimore and Ohio and other roads which now reach New England by way of Jersey City and the New Haven's Harlem terminus means, if it goes into effect, is that all through traffic in carload lots between points on those railroads and New England will be terminated.

It means that New Jersey, Pennsylvania and shippers from points on the Baltimore and Ohio, Western Maryland, etc., who are now dependent upon this line for their trade to New England, must abandon that trade; and co-relatively it means that all New England shippers will therefore be unable to ship to points on these railroads.

"This would be discrimination of the most serious kind," said a Jersey Central official today, "against manufacturers and shippers at all these points, and would put them at the mercy of their competitors. It would work with peculiar hardship upon all industries that are under contract to deliver in the future at points on these roads, and would put an end to an exchange of business that has been going on freely, and indeed has been encouraged by the New Haven Railroad for more than twenty years last past continuously.

"The Jersey Central stands for the open door. It seeks to keep all these channels of communication to which business has accustomed itself open freely to all.

"Many manufacturers on our lines, and also in New England, have already come to us in the greatest alarm, and we have every reason to suppose that they will call this matter, which is so vital to them, and to the communities in which they line, to the attention of their respective Boards of Trade, Chambers of Comberce, etc., or perhaps the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"We do not understand that the question of settlement for car hire, or per diem, as it is generally known, enters into this matter in any form, for the reason that other roads doing business with the New Haven Company have not been called upon to discontinue their service with that company.

"The Poughkeepsie Bridge Route which is mentioned in connection with this embargo upon the business interests of the community we serve, is a visionary measure utterly impossible and impracticable beyond the extent to which it is now being employed, and so long as the New York, New Haven and Hartford R. R. continues to interchange traffic with other railroad companies via the Jersey City gateway, it cannot discriminate against the shippers and industries upon our line and in favor of those upon other lines.

"The blow falls upon the commercial interests, rather than upon the railroad company which servies them. We do not believe that the matter has been sufficiently considered in all of its aspects by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, and that upon further consideration, and in view of the irreparable damage which will be committeed against those industries which will be cut off, the embargo will be withdrawn."

MISS MARIE ROGERS THE BRIDE OF J. W. MOSHER.

Miss Marie Rogers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Albert Rogers, and John Wendell Mosher, of Madison avenue, were quietly married this afternoon at the home of the bride's parents by Rev. George B. Shaw, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church. The invitation list was limited, there being not more than thirty guests present. Following the ceremony and informal reception, the couple left for a wedding trip to Buffalo and Rochester.

Both bride and groom are active members of the Seventh-Day Baptist church and they have a host of friends. Mr. Mosher is in the employ of F. L. C. Martin at his auto garage. The bride received a large collection of gifts. Upon their return they will reside with the bride's parents on Madison avenue.

—The best there is in the fruit and vegetable line is always to be had at Neuman Brothers'. Everything strictly fresh and the assortment always large.

—The Plainfield Board of Health will hold its December meeting this afternoon.

MORE PAY FOR POLICE

Captain, Sergeant, Detective Sergeant and Roundsmen Petition City Fathers.

COMMITTEE GETS REQUEST.

Taking the position that the scale of wages in the police department is not properly graduated some of the policemen presented a petition to the Common Council at the December meeting last night, asking for an increase in pay which they say will be more equitable. The petition cited the fact that at present the captain receives an annual salary of $1,100, the sergeant and detective-sergeant each $1,020, while the roundsmen and patrolmen are paid $996.

The petitioners suggested the following schedule: Captain, $1,400; sergeant, $1,300; detective-sergeant, $1,300; roundsmen, $1,200; patrolmen, $996. The matter was referred to the police committee and while no report was made concerning it last night, it is believed that Chairman Frank Randolph intends to favor the adoption of the new schedule in the near future.

As expected Mayor Fisk appointed three special policemen for regular duty, following the recent examination of several candidates. Those appointed and confirmed are Thomas J. Burns, Richard Birmingham and Earl Stanley Smith. Burns was a letter-carrier until dismissed from the service. Birmingham has been employed for a number of years by Michael Quinn, the blacksmith, while Smith has been employed as a machinist.

The resignations of Bernard Clark and John J. Neylon as call-men in the fire department were received and accepted. Mr. Clark resigned because of his removal to Elizabeth, while the resignation of Mr. Neylon was presented so that Mayor Fisk might appoint him a permanent memmer of the department, which he did. The appointment was confirmed. The Mayor also appointed John J. Kriney and Frederick D. Wilbur as call-men and they were confirmed.

TIMBO CLUB TENDERS SMOKER TO GOLD MEDALS

In return for their help at the organization's annual ball in Saengerbund Hall in October, the members of Muir's Gold Medal minstrel troupe were tendered a reception and smoker by the Timbo Social Club, last night. The affair was held in the club rooms on North avenue and the attendance in all numbered over 100.

During the early part of the evening, an informal program of songs and choruses occupied the time. Harry Wetton, of Roselle, the expert pianist, alternated with Judge William N. Runyon in acting as accompanist, and Thomas De Meza contributed several instrumental numbers. The Gold Medal troupe introduced a tabloid minstrel first part that served to feature numerous specialities and vocal effects.

Of the individual solos, one rendered by James Saverd, of the Timbo Club, received the heartiest encore. It is the latest love ballad and is entitled, "When the Weeping Willows Wept." The soloist was called upon to repeat it several times. Another "hit" was scored by John V. Todd, who introduced the season's success, "Pretty Mary," while Tom Fay won recognition as a "headliner" with the English ballad, "Anything," made popular by Harry Lauder. Other solos were given by David Barry, of Elizabeth; Frank Foster, of Philadelphia; Judge Runyon, B. C. Firstbrook, John H. Cose, Joseph C. Martin and Harry Blimm. A course supper was served at midnight.

The affair was arranged by a committee from the Timbo Club composed of Henry Wierenga, H. P. Greenwood, John Conway, John Powers, William Doud and Thomas Fay.

Chief Weiss Has the Grippe.

Chief Marshall Weiss, of the borough police force, who is confined to his home with an attack of the grippe, is reported slightly better today. During his absence from duty, Marshal Lemuel Pope is strolling up and down the borough's "Great White Way," in official capacity as head of the North Plainfield police.

Shorter Sessions at Two Schools.

Beginning regularly after the Christmas vacation, the Stillman and Whittier Schools will close a half-hour earlier and the recess will be fifteen minutes, instead of half an hour as at present. This will make the closing hour 1 o'clock for the day.

MAYOR ASKS P. S. C. TO MAKE A PAYMENT

At the request of Mayor Charles J. Fisk a conference with P. S. C. officials was held in the office of the former, last night, when it was suggested to the representatives of the company that inasmuch as the city had paid the electric lighting bill of $11,429 for the year, the company could afford to make a payment toward the brick pavement work now progressing on Watchung avenue and East Front street.

It was pointed out that while the brick work was not completed, it would be between the trolley tracks within a few days, weather permitting, and the Mayor urged that the company pay a portion of its share of the expense. The officials took the matter under advisement and it is believed that the Mayor's request will be acceded to within a short time.

RECEIVER APPOINTED FOR ANGLEMAN'S BUSINESS

Representing four creditors, the Plainfield Beef Company, the Union Beef Company, the Dunham Grocery Company, of this city, and E. J. Gillies, of New York; Counsellors Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., and Francis J. Blatz, appeared before Judge Lanning in the United States District Court at Trenton, yesterday, and filed a petition for involuntary bankruptcy against William H. Angleman, the North Plainfield groceryman, who abandoned his business on November 19. Judge Lanning signed the order and appointed Isaac P. Runyon, of this city, receiver for the estate.

The signing of the order restrains Simeon A. Cruikshank from proceeding further in his attachment proceedings against Angleman's proprety, his lawyer, former Judge William A. Coddington, having secured the first writ and consequently gaining prior claim. The groceryman is indebted to Cruikshank for $2,000 and when it was announced that Angleman had left the city, Judge Coddington hurried to Somerville in his automobile and took out the attachment. He was just thirty minutes ahead of Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., who proceeded to the county seat by train. According to the New Jersey law, the first plaintiff in proceedings of this nature gets his full claim while the rest have to divide pro rata.

An appraisal of Angleman's goods showed their total value to be about $1,400 and as Cruikshank's claim is $2,000 the other four creditors would have been barred out. As it remains now, all five must share alike.

SEEK AN INJUNCTION TO END A NUISANCE

The suit in chancery of Miles Reusch and other residents of Alton against Theodore Glazier, also of that place, will be heard before Vice Chancellor Walker in the Common Council rooms Monday, December 9, when the complainants will attempt to have made permanent the temporary injunction obtained restraining the defendant from conducting his fertilizing plant at Alton. Codington & Swackhamer represent the complainants and William Newcorn the defendant.

Sometime ago a bill was filed in chancery and a temporary injunction secured restraining Mr. Glazier. This was afterward modified to such an extent that he was permitted to continue the business provided it did not become a nuisance. It is now claimed that it is a nuisance and the complainants want the injunction made permanent.

STATION AGENT TELLS WHY WHY HE DISMISSED WAGNER.

Interviewed by a Daily Press reporter today, Station Agent Joseph A. Haynes denied the statement that Jacob Wagner, assistant baggagemaster at the North Avenue station, had been dismissed without warning or that his discharge was brought about by disputes arising from the baggage express business.

"Mr. Wagner was asked to resign a week before I was instructed to give notice of dismissal," he said. "In this way he would have stood in line for another position with the company but he refused to do so. As for the cause of the company's action, it was due to no other reason than that he was not capable of holding his place."

Mr. Wagner had been with the New Jersey Central thirty-eight years, for many years being engineer in the old pump house near the Fourth street station. He had been assistant baggagemaster for eight years.

EPISCOPALIANS REPORTED

Rectors and Vestry Report at Parish Meetings of Holy Cross and Grace Churches.

THE OFFICERS FOR NEW YEAR.

Wardens and Vestrymen Chosen By the Paristh, When All Give An Account of Their Stewardship.

Annual parish meetings, at which reports for the year were read and officers and committees elected for the coming year, were held last night at Holy Cross church and at Grace church. The meeting of St. Stephen's church will be held tonight. These meetings are in accordance with a church law that at Advent the officers and rectors of Episcopal churches shall "give an account of their stewardship" for the twelve months past.

Holy Cross Church.

Reports of parish work were submitted and officers for the coming church year elected at the parish meeting held at Holy Cross church last night. The meeting, which was attended by a good representation of the church congregation, was held in the church at the close of the special evening service, and the reports submitted showed the church to be in good financial standing and attested advancement along all lines of parish work since last Advent.

C. E. Murray, secretary of the parish, read a report which showed an increase in membership and in attendance at the church services and summarized the work of the vestry during the past twelve months. Treasurer Charles L. Nichols, of the vestry, reported that the expenditures in connection with the church had amounted to about $7,000 during the past year, and a small balance on hand. Though no itemized report was presented, it is estimated that the net proceeds of the recent "Mother Goose" bazaar given by the parish, will amount to about $300. Rev. G. A. Warner, rector of the parish, reported on the work of the past year. He expressed gratification at the support which has been given him in all branches of parish work, not only during the past year, but during the two years he has been in charge of Holy Cross parish. He outlined some plans for the future and urged the support of each and every member of the parish in all branches of church work.

The rector's plan, to purchase the property adjoining the church on Washington avenue for a rectory, and to dispose of the present rectory at 30 Washington avenue, was discussed and met with general approval. The property is at present unoccupied. It is owned by E. A. Embury, of Summit, son of Rev. Dr. Embury, first rector of Holy Cross church and donor of the church and the lot.

A committee, consisting of the rector, C. L. Nichols, Frederick Harrington, Dr. J. H. Carman and W. L. Saunders, was appointed to arrange for the purchase of the Embury place and to report to the vestry as soon as terms can be concluded.

At the election of officers for the coming year, the following were elected: Senior warden, Dr. J. H. Carman; junior warden, Charles L. Nichols; vestrymen, William L. Saunders, Frederick C. Harrington, Herbert Langford, C. Everett Murray and J. Wesley Hegemen, Jr. These are all re-elections. Charles L. Nichols was re-elected treasurer of the parish, and Frederick Harrington, assistant treasurer. Three delegates and three alternates were elected for the annual diocesan convention to be held in the spring.

Grace Church.

The annual meeting of Grace church was held last night at the parish house, when wardens and vestrymen were elected for the year and reports for the past year were presented. The treasurer's report showed that the church debt had been paid and the edifice consecrated. The review of the past twelve months' work by the rector, Rev. E. Vicar Stevenson, was most encouraging, indicating much progress in all departments of the parish.

These wardens were elected: Howard Fleming, W. T. Gough. The vestrymen chosen are as follows: W. T. Pelletier, J. Paul Nolting, G. M. Holstein, E. F. Feickert, O. G. Waring, George S. Clay and F. W. Iredell. Howard Fleming, W. T. Gough and J. B. Dumont were chosen as delegates to the diocesan convention, the alternates being E. F. Feickert, J. Paul Nolting and R. Henry Depew.

Syrian Lecturer for Men's Club.

Wal-el-Ward, a Syrian, born near Mt. Zion, Palestine, will lecture before the Men's Club of the First Baptist church Monday evening on "A Pedestrian Journey from Joppa to Jerusalem." The lecturer has spent much of his life in the country of Palestine, among the scenes of New Testament history.

The Christmas Show

The wheels of this great Christmas show are now revolving smoothly—such stocks as we have found necessary to move for the facilitation of public comfort are now finally settled, and the big, bright, sparkling Christmas store is ready to receive its hundreds of thousands of holiday visitors. Come tomorrow, bring the little folks and see the sights. The latch string is out—you are welcome.

SEE THE LIGHTS

Alice in Wonderland could not have conjured a more captivating scene than our great street floor presented Saturday when the marvelous electrical display, which we have been so long planning, was switched on for the first time. The effect is indescribable—sumptuous in fact—and worth coming any distance to see—bring your friends and visitors—this store is one of Newark's show places—don't miss it.

STORE SERVICE

The same perfection of detail and the same broad policy which for seasons long past have characterized this organization and proclaimed it from one end of New Jersey to the other as the State's greatest Christmas store, find in this year's effort their fullest expression. Visit us tomorrow and put us to the test. We will satisfy you.

THE TOY STORE

What a marvelous place is "Toytown." What a merry, rollicking spot. The great 5th floor is piled ceiling high with wonderful playthings—steam toys, mechanical toys, electrical toys, games, animals, dolls automobiles—thousands upon thousands of novel ideas from every corner of the globe. Come tomorrow and bring the little ones—Old Santa Claus is here and will present them with a pretty present.

The Cough Cure His Great-Grandmother Used

Cure your children's coughs with the oldest and best-known cough remedy in the world—the same one their great-grandmothers used and had faith in.

is the same today as when it was first prescribed by Dr. Jayne 77 years ago. This remedy has relieved and cured coughs so successfully for generations that it is to-day the standard cough cure in thousands of homes all over the world.

Don't neglect your children's coughs—don't neglect your own cough. The system is quickly weakened by a constant irritating cough, and laid open to pneumonia and other pulmonary diseases. The best time to cure a cough is right now, and the best remedy is Jayne's Expectorant.

Three sized bottles, $1.00, 50c., 25c.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

From the moment the curtain rises on "Brown from Missouri" the intense interest as to the outcome is awakened, and it is never allowed to

doze again during the entire three acts of the play. The extremely funny situations keep the audience in an uproar. The play takes high rank with the few successes of the present season, and not one adverse criticism has been recorded against it, and this is a record very few plays can lay to their credit. In the play will appear Hal Brown, Miss Ethel Blande, Leander De Cordova, and Miss Frances Brooks, supported by one of the strongest touring companies, composed of actors picked from the best ranks of the profession. The play will be seen at the New Plainfield theatre tonight.

A melodrama considerably out of the ordinary and introducing Lew Welch, one of the highest salaried artists and withal most well known comedian and character actor before the public, will be presented at the New Plainfield theatre next Thursday night. It is by Hal Reid and is entitled "The Shoemaker." During the progress of the play's four acts there is not a dull moment. The action is consistent and plausible and the plot is developed in an intelligent and natural manner. "The Shoemaker" differs from contemporary plays of the same kind in that it makes a strong appeal to the heart, depicting life as it exists. There is no attempt at exaggeration or spectacular effect. It is a play founded on the frailties of human nature and constructed by a master hand for the purpose of edifying, amusing and interesting.

If George M. Cohan had never written anything else but "The Honeymooners" he would be famous and a national favorite for the piece combines all the Cohan excellencies and is quite irresistible. Direct from its brilliant summer success at the New Amsterdam theatre, New York, "The Honeymooners" comes to the New Plainfield theatre next Saturday afternoon and night, with the original production. The fact that the Cohan song show ran all last summer in New York at a $2 scale of prices is evidence of its intrinsic worth. Anything that Mr. Cohan does for the stage is worth while but "The Honeymooners" is his most entertaining effort up to date. It is what the theatrical profession in its private councils designate as "the big show."

Faithful Sunday-school Teaching.

As a result of earnest, faithful teaching in the Sunday-school, Elmer W. Bennett, Elmer E. Gayle and Arthur G. Gaskill were received into membership at the communion service in Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning on confession of faith. Miss Mary A. Wyckoff was also received into membership by letter.

No Turkey Supper This Year.

The Ladies' Christian Work Society of Trinity Reformed church met yesterday afternoon and much to the regret of many it was decided not to hold the annual turkey supper this year. This has been one of the social features of the year, but the women for several reasons thought it best to give up the affair.

Mrs. William Cuzen and son, Robert, of New York, who have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. James Cuzen, of West End avenue, have returned.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

GOLF.

Unless the authorities reconsider their latest action there will be no more golf played over the public links at Van Cortland Park this year. Between 500 and 1,000 players visited Van Cortlandt Sunday and when it became generally known that beginning with yesterday no more golf would be permitted there was general indignation.

So unexpected was the announcement that John P. O'Connell, proprietor of the golf house adjacent to the links, asked Joseph I. Berry, Park Commissioner of the Borough of The Bronx, for an explanation. The Commissioner's reply was to the effect that playing over the links at this season of the year was injurious to the turf, and as the aim was always toward an improvement of the existing conditions it was thought that the course would be benefited generally by a rest.

It has been customary in the past to close the links in March, when the frost is coming out of the ground. It is understood that even the temporary course on the Parade Grounds is to be omitted during the ensuing winter.

The New York Golf Club, which has its headquarters at Van Cortlandt, is to have a meeting shortly when some form of protest will be drafted. It is not unlikely that a petition signed by several hundred frequenters of the links will be presented to the Commissioner. A number of individual letters will also be written.

FOOTBALL.

Actual playing being a thing of the past in the football season, the community is now in the throes of the harmless pastime of picking "all" teams. In reality there is no reason why there should not be as many "all" teams as there are football followers. Every man is entitled to his own choice, and there is no such thing as an official selection. Walter Camp's comes nearest to being regarded as official, and it would not be a bad idea if the official stamp were placed on Camp's or some other impartial expert's selection. On the other hand, some hardy pioneer may come to the front some day with sufficient temerity to set an example by not picking any "all" team, a fictitious growth now found on every bush.

It would be a hard scrap between the two teams named below, with the odds only slightly in favor of the first team. These two teams are not all American teams. It is hard enough to pick teams from the Eastern players, and even then there is a chance of leaving off some player of a smaller eleven who is entitled to a place. Therefore the following first and second teams are all Eastern teams pure and simple:

First Team—Dague, Annapolis, and Exendine, Carlisle, ends; Biglow, Yale, and Draper, Pennsylvania, tackles; Ziegler, Pennsylvania, and Erwin, West Point, guards; Grant, Harvard, centre; Jones, Yale, quarterback; Hollenback, Pennsylvania, and Coy, Yale, halfbacks; McCormick, Princeton, fullback.

Second Team—Wister, Princeton, and Alcott, Yale, ends; Horr, Syracuse, and O'Rourke, Cornell, tackles; Thompson, Cornell, and Goebel, Yale, guards; Slingluff, Annapolis, centre; Dillon, Princeton, quarterback; Douglas, Annapolis, and Wendell, Harvard, halfbacks; Hauser, Carlisle, fullback.

The first thing that strikes one about the first team named is its offensive strength. It contains a rare lot of men who are proficient at advancing the ball. Draper and Ziegler in the line and every one of the four backs are conspicuously capable ground gainers and the ends are good at receiving the forward pass and making whatever gains may accrue from that method of advance.

In ranking the teams it is plain sailing to assign first place. That berth goes to Yale. The Blue had the best defence and the best attack. Its offence was the most advanced in football. Its offensive tactics were admirably blended—timely use of onside kicks and forward passes, deceptive plays and vehement line forcing. The Elis have made more progress than any of the others in mastering rushing tactics to gain ten yards. They rip apart an opposing line with more sustained power, and with ability in this department is dovetailed an effective proportion of open field manoeuvres.

In rating teams final form as well as what has gone before must be taken into consideration, also circumstances that governed results. There are contradictions to be reconciled, different way of viewing it; but here goes:

1, Yale; 2, Princeton; 3, Pennsylvania; 4, Carlisle; 5, Cornell; 6, Dartmouth; 7, Harvard; 8, Annapolis; 9, West Point; 10, Brown.

Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., will give its second annual minstrels and dance at the Casino tomorrow night. A strong program has been prepared.

Plainfield, N. J., December 3, 1907.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

In his annual message to Congress delivered at noon today at Washington, President Roosevelt prefaces his views on matters of current National import with a sound and satisfying defense of his pursuit of the handful, of unscrupulous and reckness money kinds whose acts are responsible for the present financial stringency, summing up his case by declaring "There may be honest differences of opinion as to many governmental policies, but surely there can be no such differences as to the need of unfinishing perseverance in the war against successful dishonesty."

In reviewing the situation in interstate commerce, wherein he states that "Only the National government can in thoroughgoing fashion exercise the needed control," the President strongly advocates National license for railroads, and this subject naturally leads him to a discussion of the anti-trust law. "Corporation and union labor alike have come to say," says he, and "The anti-trust law should not be repealed, but it should be made both more efficient and more in harmony with actual conditions. It should be so amended as to forbid only the kind of combination which does harm to the general public, such amendment to be accompanied by or to be an incident of a grant of supervisory power to the government over these big concerns engaged in interstate business."

"A combination should not be tolerated," says the President, "if it abuse the power acquired by combination to the public detriment. No corporation or association of any kind should be permitted to engage in foreign or interstate commerce that is formed for the purpose of or whose operations create a monopoly or general control of the production, sale or distribution of any one or more of the prime necessities of life or articles of general use and necessity."

After declaring that "the real owners of a corporation should be compelled to do business in their own name," the President dwells at length on the recent crisis, stating incidently that the institutions which failed were those not under Federal control, while those under such control "stood the test." The pure food law is touched upon and then the President proceeds to advocate currency legislation.

"We need a greater elasticity in our currency," he declares, "provided of course that we recognize the even greater need of a safe and secure currency. Provision should be made for an emergency currency," and in the course of his remarks, he ventures the assertion that "It is worth investigating to determine whether officers and directors of national banks should ever be allowed to loan to themselves. Trust companies should be subject to the same supervision as banks."

"The subject of tariff revision," says Mr. Roosevelt, "should be approached from a purely business standpoint," and "this means that the subject cannot with wisdom be dealt with in the year preceding a presidential election, because as a matter of fact experience has conclusively shown that at such a time it is impossible to get men to treat it from the standpoint of the public good. In my judgment the wise time to deal with the matter is immediately after such election." He makes an exception, however, in urging the repeal of the tariff on forest products especially the duty on wood pulp.

Passing on to another important subject, the President says: "When our tax laws are revised the question of an income tax and an inheritance tax should receive the careful attention of our legislators. In my judgment, both of these taxes should be part of our system of Federal taxation." Continuing, he states: "The tax should if possible be made to bear more heavily upon those residing without the country than within it. A heavy progressive tax upon a very large fortune is in no way such a tax upon thrift or industry as a like tax would be on a small fortune."

Much stress is laid by him on the right of injunction in disputes between capital and labor, saying: "I earnestly commend to the attention of the congress this matter, so that some way may be devised which will limit the abuse of injunctions and protect those rights which from time to time it unwarrantably invades." Still another feature of the document is the President's advocacy of postal saving banks, wherein he states: "I commend to the favorable consideration of the congress a postal savings bank as recommended by the postmastel general." Citizenship for the people of Porto Rico is also recommended.

The message at length will be found in other columns of this issue.

LILLIAN RUSSELL'S CHARMS HAVE NOT FADED WITH AGE.

Lillian Russell, the former comic opera queen, made her appearance in Plainfield as a comedienne last night. Surrounded by a well balanced and capable company she presented the new comedy, "Wildfire," the joint work of George V. Hobart and George Broadhurst, before a crowded house at the New Plainfield theatre. While the role she assumes is congenial and well fitting it is entirely different from those with which her name has always been associated, yet she showed her versatility in portraying the part of a "sporty" widow with distinct credit.

"Wildfire" is built on the conventional track and paddock lines but has a vein of comedy running through it that is decidedly Hobartesque. Miss Russell's sartorial display attracted a lot of attention from the women in the audience but both men and women marvelled at the secret of the fair Lillian's perpetual youth. Though she is now on the shady side of fifty, she looked as fresh and charming as in the days when she was the prima donna of "The Sorcerer," "The Snake Charmer," "Poor Jonathan" and "Princess Noctine." There's more than one of the matrons who gazed at her last night who would give a great deal to drink from the same fountain of preservative powers.

The audience included a number of New Yorkers, aming them Joseph Brooks, the owner of the production, and Jesse Lewissohn, a prominent "Great White Way" figure.

REDUCE RATE OF INTEREST ON SEWER ASSESSMENT.

In view of the unavoidable increase in the tax rate together with the stringency of the money market at present, as he expressed it, Mayor Fisk sent a communication to the Common Council at its December meeting last night, suggesting that as a means of lessening the burden on taxpayers who have sewer assessments to pay that a rate of six percent. per annum be charged instead of the present rate of one per cent. a month, in cases where the assessments are paid within two years. If not paid withi nthat time the one per cent. a month rate is to be charged.

This suggestion was accompanied by a resolution, embodying the provisions named and offered for adoption. Mr. Tyler objected to favorable action, not because he was opposed to the plan, but because it had not been considered by the finance committee. He amended the motion for adoption so that the matter might be referred to the finance committee, but the amendment was lost, he and Mr. Hibbard being the only two to vote in favor. On the adoption of the resolution all voted in favor except Mr. Hibbard, who continued to express his opposition believing that nothing would be loss by laying the matter over.

MACFADDEN TO GIVE TALK ON PRUDERY HERE.

Bernarr MacFadden, a physical culture worker, founder of Physical Culture City, N. J., and editor of a physical culture magazine, who was recently sentenced to two years in prison and to pay a fine of $2,500 by Judge Lanning in the United States District Court, at Trenton, for an alleged offensive article in his own publication, has planned a campaign to try to obtain a reversal of both verdict and sentence. He intends to make a lecture tour through this State during the month. This follows clase on appeal of his case direct to the United States Supreme Court. In the first instance, the editor declares his intention of stating his side of the case to the people, as he says he believes his fight is a battle for the people and of interest to them. In the second, he is going to thresh out in the highest court the status of his constitutional rights, alleging that they have been infringed upon.

Mr. Macfadden will open his lecture campaign in this city. He will speak at the Casino on Wednesday evening, December 11 on "Prudery and Degeneracy." In addition to this lecture, Mr. Macfadden will provide a physical culture entertainment.

—Arrangements are about complete for the first dance and entertainment to be given at the Casino on Friday night, December 20, by the Plainfield Council, United Commercial Travelers. Frank W. Weed is chairman of the committee of arrangements.

Mr. W. de LaR. Anderson, Manager, offers the complete service wishing to transact business with any of the above concerns. Quota

"Of course, of course," he hastened to assure me. "And you really wish to understand why war would break out to-morrow in the Balkans if Sir Mortimer Brett lifted his little finger?"

"If such a knowledge is the prelude to the scandal that concerns him."

"Very well," he agreed good-naturedly. "But don't despair if you are still muddled after ten minutes' talk on Balkan politics; Count von Bulow has said that the man who comprehends the situation in the Balkan State does not exist. But to understand how Sir Mortimer's influence may plunge Europe into war to-day, just as surely as when Madame de Pompadour twisted Louis XV about her little finger, you must know something of the trouble that seethes and bubbles in Turkish-Macedonia."

"Hang it, have I got to give you a lesson in geography as well as in history?" growled Locke. "Well, Macedonia is actually no state or country. It is simply a term to designate a strip of Turkish territory immediately to the south of Bulgaria. It is with independent Bulgaria and insurgent Macedonia that our friend Sir Mortimer Brett is concerned. In a word, the situation is this: Bulgaria, long freed from the Turkish yoke, would help struggling Macedonia to gain her freedom.

"Macedonia itself is an extraordinary hodgepodge of races—Greeks, Turks, Serbs, Bosnians, Bulgars—there are a dozen dirty little races, and half a dozen fanatic sects all ready to fly at each other's throats if they were not too busy struggling for their freedom. But Greek, Catholic, Jew, they are all ready to die cheerfully if they can down their Turkish oppressor. It is just this sublime struggle for freedom that gives a touch of nobility to mongrel, snarling, snapping Macedonia. These Macedonians for years have been putting up one of the pluckiest running fights imaginable. The House of Commons indulges in solemn piffle about what they choose to call the Balance of Criminality. In other words, they profess to think that the atrocities committed by the Turks and the Macedonians are equally horrible. But, as a matter of fact, English knowledge of Macedonian affairs is doled out by the London Times, which in turn gets its facts from the English embassy at Constantinople, professedly pro-Turkish in its sympathies."

"How do you account for that?" I demanded with a show of interest. Locke's lecture was not thrilling, but I listened patiently; for I realized that his information was necessary if I would understand Sir Mortimer's predicament.

"The missionaries," continued Locke, "know only too well that the unspeakable Turk is an even greater scoundrel than Mr. Gladstone chose to believe him. But the Foreign Office, you will understand, does not intend to risk the peace of Europe because the missionaries rave about the outraging and slaughter of a few thousands of Macedonian women and children.

"For several years they have continued a guerrilla warfare—if you can dignify the dynamiting of a railroad or a bridge and the stealthy slaughter of unarmed bands as warfare. The Macedonian campaign has been managed by a body of men who have their headquarters at Sofia, in Bulgaria.

"They fight in bands. Their arms are hidden in the fields or in the caves of the mountains. When a Turkish force surrounds one of these bands it finds peaceful peasants herding their sheep on the hills or tilling their fields.

"Such a hopeless struggle as this could continue for years," I interrupted. "But where does Bulgaria come in?"

"Bulgaria comes in right here with a flourish of trumpets, and Prince Ferdinand is at the head of the procession.

"Nominally Bulgaria is independent; actually Ferdinand does fealty to the sultan, and at the same time is under the thumb of Russia. He is a prince calling with as inordinate a sense of his own importance as a canary wearing a top hat. He has surrounded himself with more state than a king or a kaiser. Ferdinand's great ambition is to be crowned king. Now he is only in the title of prince. He has implored his great master, the sultan, to assume that title, but Nicholas prefers that Ferdinand be humble. Then if he cannot be king,' says Ferdinand, 'I will have with you any other title.' Ferdinand is most anxious to have the doubtful honor of a more indulgent czar has decided that he is to be that protector.

"What has all this to do with Bulgaria's assistance of Macedonia?" I asked, impatiently. "Ferdinand knows that Russia will give the title of king to himself more readily than he is at present entitled to bestow a consenient means of accomplishing this. But before he flings his army into Macedonia territory, he must be sure that he will have a free hand. Let England once assure him of her moral support, and Ferdinand will invade Macedonia to-morrow."

"It is at this juncture, I suppose, that Sir Mortimer Brett, consul general and minister plenipotentiary, holds the center of the stage?"

"Yes, it is about his diplomatic head that the elements rage. But a Jewish banker of New York city runs him a close second in importance."

"A remarkable statement, that."

"And this little Jew is a remarkable man. A Macedonian by birth, he has made five score of millions in America. But he remembers his country in the time of her need. It is he who offers to clothe, arm, and feed the Bulgarian narmy, if it fights for the freedom of his race. His one condition is this: the invasion must have a reasonably sure chance of success. That is assured, he thinks, when England agrees to stand behind Bulgaria."

"And the name of this Jewish banker?"

"Otto Kuhn. One must not forget him."

CHAPTER IX.

The Episode of the English Ambassador.

We are now ready for the extraordinary episode of Sir Mortimer Brett," Locke resumed. "I think you will find that the narrative grows more interesting."

"I trust so," I yawned.

"Sir Mortimer is a comparatively young man, I understand. But he has already had 15 years to his experience as a diplomatist. He has been trusted implicitly by the British foreign office. He has been nothing less than a dictator in Bulgarian affairs, so far as England is concerned. There have been repeated attempts to bribe him. But he has been strong enough to resist all pressure—whether it be exerted by the sultan or by Ferdinand. But after an unblemished record of 15 years this Bayard in politics has fallen a victim to a vulgar intrigue with a political adventuress.

"Countess Sarahoff is the adventuress—a woman of marvelous charm and beauty. It is said she is the friend of Prince Ferdinand; perhaps it is he who first incited her to entice Sir Mortimer from the path of rectitude. Certain it is that she has been successful in bringing Sir Mortimer supinely to his knees before her, if the gossip of the embassies is to be believed.

"Now I can give you the situation in a nutshell. If Sir Mortimer is recalled, it is all up with Macedonia so far as immediate help from Bulgaria is concerned. Sir Mortimer's successor as consul general will certainly be the present vice-consul, and he is known to be strongly adverse to the Macedonian cause. Our Jewish banker will refuse his loan to Ferdinand; Ferdinand will be unable and unwilling to subsidize an army; Macedonia's struggle will come to nothing for the present."

"This banker must have remarkable faith in Sir Mortimer," I suggested, "to think that he can influence the British foreign office when his reputation is already tottering."

"My dear Haddon, I have been letting you behind the scenes. Our banker friend in all probability has no inkling of Sir Mortimer's impending fall. There is nothing to damn a man politically because he is in love with a woman. It is true that there have been innuendoes in plenty of the papers. But who believes the papers?"

"And a king's messenger has already been sent to Sofia to demand Sir Mortimer's recall?" I asked, thoughtfully.

"So they say, and now I come to a really humorous phase of this episode of Sir Mortimer Brett. When the king's messenger arrives at Sofia he will be unable to deliver his dispatches; he will find that his bird has flown."

"Less than a week ago Sir Mortimer was seen with Countess Sirahoff here in Lucerne. He had left Sofia suddenly under the plea of sickness, whether real or assumed. And now he has disappeared again from here, and has left absolutely no trace of his whereabouts."

"So that when the king's messenger comes here he will still be unable to deliver his dispatches. As you say, it is an extraordinary state of affairs. I suppose that Sir Mortimer continues to be a properly credited ambassador until he receives those dispatches?"

"Undoubtedly."

"And in the meanwhile there is a hue and cry for him?"

"My dear fellow, I have told you repeatedly that you are behind the scenes. Ostensibly Sir Mortimer has gone to the mountains for his health. But the arrival here in Lucerne of the mother and daughter is significant."

"They come to rescue him from the influence of Countess Sarahoff of course. But if she has disappeared with Sir Mortimer—"

"I saw you flirting with her at the kursaal about an hour ago," said Locke, smiling at me grimly.

CHAPTER X.

The Death-Mask.

I had raised my glass carelessly to my lips. I placed it slowly on the table. I met Locke's steady gaze not merely in surprise, rather in complete conviction. That was precisely the kind of woman I had determined she must be. But I had no intention of discussing her with Locke. A plan was already seething in my brain—a plan infinitely more thrilling than rescuing a comrade in the battlefield or a traveler lost in the mountain-side. I intended to keep that plan to myself. In the meanwhile I must have further details of this escapade of the missing ambassador.

"We will speak of Countess Sarahoff presently," I said, returning his smile coolly. "But tell me, why should England adopt the slow and clumsy expedient of sending a king's messenger, as you call him, across Europe, instead of demanding the instant recall of the minister by cable? That is my first question, and my second is this: are you my dear Locke, in the secret councils of the British foreign office that you know so much of their plans?"

"A king's messenger," drawled Locke, "is supposed to have a brain between his shoulders and to exercise his discretion. The foreign office would wish to be quite sure that the scandal was not a clever ruse of a secret agent of Russia or Turkey. Even if the scandal exists, there might be mitigating circumstances."

"You wish me to infer that this king's messenger is given discretionary powers of delivering or withholding his dispatch? But how do you know that? That brings me to the second question."

"My dear chap, I can put two and two together, can't I? I can see a church door, as Benedict said, when I am standing in front of it."

"Oh, then, you are simply guessing," I cried, disgusted.

Locke spread the tips of his fingers together, and regarded me humorously. "You forget I am consul at Lucerne? I, sir, am a personage."

"Rubbish!" I exclaimed, brusquely. "American consuls are not as a rule deeply in the confidence of the ministers in Downing street."

Locke laughed, looked about him cautiously, then whispered:

"It's something of a secret, Haddon. Before I was consul at Lucerne I was a newspaper man. Yes; don't look shocked. I am not averse to eking out the magnificent income allowed me by the United States government by sending a budget of news occasionally to my old chief."

"I understand; you newspaper men are ubiquitous. Before the mysterious knowledge of the press I am silent."

"I need hardly say that what I have told you is strictly between ourselves."

"Of course."

"So far I have not breathed a word of this extraordinary story. I wish to make a grand coup. I am waiting for the finale of the story—the dramatic and perhaps tragic denouement For the end is not yet."

So saying, Locke produced his pocketbook. From its voluminous folds he extracted an envelope. He held it toward me in silence. I took it curiously. It bore an unfamiliar stamp.

"It is the stamp in the corner I wish you to examine carefully. In ten years a collector will pay a pretty penny for this stamp. Already it is as rare as strawberries in January. It was issued less than a month ago to mark the anniversary of Ferdinand's succession to the throne. Yes, it is his likeness and that of his son you are looking at. But Ferdinand would pay half a million francs if he could buy up and destroy that issue of stamps. In Bulgaria that is a simple matter. His secret agents are on the lookout in every capital of Europe. But you see they are not wholly successful."

As Locke had suggested, I looked critically at this double stamp which had caused Ferdinand so much anxiety. Two heads were depicted. They were placed side by side, a man of middle age and a handsome boy. It appeared to me a rather ordinary sort of stamp.

"Hold it upside down," commanded Locke, impatiently. "Cover the left-hand corner with your hand, so. Now, do you see that a portion of the heads of the father and son makes an unmistakable death-mask? And the death-mask is that of Prince Ferdinand."

Looked at in this manner the ghastly portent was vividly suggested. The nostrils of the two heads together formed the eyes of the death-mask; the mustache of the father made the eyebrows; and the brow and the eyes of the boy prince formed the nose and mouth. And more horrible than the death-mask itself was a wound in the temple, from which flowed a streak of blood.

"This wound," I asked, shuddering, "is it merely a coincidence? The look of agony—the staring eyes—is that meant to be a menace, a threat of a violent death?"

"Can you doubt it?" demanded Locke, replacing the envelope carefully in his pocketbook. "That death-mask is regarded by a large portion of Ferdinand's dissatisfied subjects as a 'heavenly sign.' That little stamp, I venture to say, is a death-knell for Ferdinand—it introduces into Bulgarian politics an awful and solemn note."

"A 'heavenly sign?'" I asked, shuddering again. "But he still lives?"

"Yes; at present he is in Paris. I suppose he is safe there. But when he returns to his capital at Sofia—"

"And the woman—this Countess Saraboff, is she one of the revolutionaries who regard that stamp as a 'heavenly sign?' You told me that she was supposed to be the friend of Prince Ferdinand."

"I did. But is she? She is a woman of mystery. Is she really in earnest in seeking to entrap Sir Mortimer into influencing England to stand behind Bulgaria in her invasion of Turkish Macedonia? Is she ignorant of the existence or at least the significance of this stamp? Or, posing as a friend of Ferdinand, having ready access to him at any hour, will hers be the dagger plunged into his breast at the fatal hour? Perhaps Sir Mortimer is not the guileless victim we think him to be. Perhaps the king's messenger does not have two sets of dispatches to be presented at his discretion. Perhaps this death-mask is a ghastly accident and not a menace. Perhaps Countess Saraboff, alias Sophie de Varnier, is a lamb of innocence. Perhaps! But, my dear chap, don't trust that 'perhaps.'"

"I understand now. You had more than one object in coming to see me this morning," I said, soberly.

He lit a cigarette, looking down at me in deep thought.

"In America the game of politics is a fair game and above board. We show our cards; they are on the table for all the world to see. The very frankness of our methods puzzles the diplomats of Europe. Here in Europe things are managed differently. There are wheels within wheels. No pawn is too insignificant to be made use of. This pawn may be a simple citizen, even a tourist—"

I shook the hand he held toward me, and retained it, bewildered.

"But that is absurd on the face of it. In what possible way could I be of use to this Countess Saraboff?"

Locke shrugged his shoulders carelessly, and blew a ring of smoke with precision at the chandelier.

"Nothing is quite absurd," he returned calmly. "Two days ago I read of an unfortunate accident of a fellow-countryman and an old college acquaintance. To-day I am surprised to find this countryman of mine on excellent terms with a woman whom I have every reason to believe is a dangerous adventuress. I come to see my fellow-countryman, to offer him my sympathy. I remain to warn him."

"But why?" I demanded, still skeptical.

"There are three facts that should make you think, Haddon. First of all, you have made the acquaintance of the mother and the sister of Sir Mortimer Brett. Secondly, Countess Sarahoff has made your acquaintance. Thirdly—contradict me if I am wrong—she has already interested you; more than that, I venture to say that you have made an appointment with her."

He looked at me keenly. I was silent.

"These, my dear Haddon, are simple facts. Perhaps there is no relation between them. Again I say, 'perhaps.' But don't let the mysterious machinery of intrigue catch you in its meshes. Its wheels may crush you. You have had enough trouble, and look out for Countess Saraboff."

"I shall try to remember your advice," I said, struggling to control my excitement, and placed his visiting-card in my pocket. "Yes; I shall see you again before I leave Lucerne."

"Oh, suit yourself about that," said Locke, coldly.

Not until afterwards did it occur to me that I had treated him rather cavalierly—indeed, laid myself open to suspicion by my silence.

SHOW STATE PUBLICATIONS IN EXHIBITION AT LIBRARY

There will be on exhibition in the delivery room of the Newark Free Public Library this week a collection of some of the most important of the publications of the State of New Jersey. The list is a comprehensive one and contains volumes on history, geology, commerce, education, biology, law and numerous other topics. All of these books may be consulted at the library, and there are duplicate copies of many of them which may be borrowed by any one having a card at the library.

The object of the exhibition of State publications is to acquaint the residents of the city in general, and the patrons of the library in particular, with the various volumes gotten out under the direction of the State. Very few people, it is believed, really know what an extensive library of useful books the State of New Jersey publishes. Many of the publications are for general distribution, but they rarely get into the hands of the general public, partly because the people do not know about them and partly because they do not know whom to ask for copies.

Of these books, two copies of each work go to the library of Congress and others to various libraries in this State. A certain number go to the Assemblymen, who distribute them among their friends if requested. Other copies of the State publications are stored until asked for which is not frequently.

Snapping Turtles for Terrapin.

The Italians who live in the towns along the Connecticut valley are reaping a harvest catching young snapping turtles, which they sell to marketmen for the New York hotel and restaurant trade for terrapin, the taste of which they closely resemble. This season of the year the snapper lies concealed in mud below the frost line and may easily be caught. The turtle, unlike other creatures that hibernate, become fat, juicy and fine flavored and is in fine condition in late fall.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

The president in his message to congress says:

No nation has greater resources than ours, and I think it can be truthfully said that the citizens of no nation possess greater energy and industrial ability. In no nation are the fundamental business conditions sounder than in ours at this very moment, and it is foolish when such is the case for people to hoard money instead of keeping it in sound banks, for it is such hoarding that is the immediate occasion of money stringency. Moreover, as a rule, the business of our people is conducted with honesty and probity, and this applies alike to farms and factories, to railroads and banks, to all our legitimate commercial enterprises.

In any large body of men, however, there are certain to be some who are dishonest, and if the conditions are such that these men prosper or commit their misdeeds with impunity their example is a very evil thing for the community. Where these men are business men of great sagacity and of temperament both unscrupulous and reckless, and where the conditions are such that they act without supervision or control and at first without effective check from public opinion, they delude many innocent people into making investments or embarking in kinds of business that are really unsound. When the misdeeds of these successfully dishonest men are discovered, suffering comes not only upon them, but upon the innocent whom they have misled. It is a painful awakening, whenever it occurs, and naturally when it does occur those who suffer are apt to forget that the longer it was deferred the more painful it would be. In the effort to punish the guilty it is both wise and proper to endeavor so far as possible to minimize the distress of those who have been misled by the guilty. Yet it is not possible to refrain because of such distress from striving to put an end to the misdeeds that are the ultimate causes of the suffering and, as a means to this end, where possible to punish those responsible for them. There may be honest differences of opinion as to many governmental policies, but surely there can be no such differences as to the need of unflinching perseverance in the war against successful dishonesty.

Interstate Commerce.

No small part of the trouble that we have comes from carrying to an extreme the national virtue of self reliance, of independence in initiative and action. It is wise to conserve this virtue and to provide for its fullest exercise compatible with seeing that liberty does not become a liberty to wrong others. Unfortunately this is the kind of liberty that the lack of all effective regulation inevitably breeds. The founders of the constitution provided that the national government should have complete and sole control of interstate commerce. There was then practically no interstate business save such as was conducted by water, and this the national government at once proceeded to regulate in thoroughgoing and effective fashion. Conditions have now so wholly changed that the interstate commerce by water is insignificant compared with the amount that goes by land, and almost all big business concerns are now engaged in interstate commerce. As a result it can be but partially and imperfectly controlled or regulated by the action of any one of the several states, such action inevitably tending to be either too drastic or else too lax and in either case ineffective for purposes of justice. Only the national government can in thoroughgoing fashion exercise the needed control. This does not mean that there should be any extension of federal authority, for such authority already exists under the constitution in amplest and most far reaching form, but it does mean that there should be an extension of federal activity. This is not advocating centralization. It is merely looking facts in the face and realizing that centralization in business has already come and cannot be avoided or undone and that the public at large can only protect itself from certain evil effects of this business centralization by providing better methods for the exercise of control through the authority already centralized in the national government by the constitution itself. There must be no halt in the healthy constructive course of action which this nation has elected to pursue and has steadily pursued during the last six years, as shown both in the legislation of the congress and the administration of the law by the department of justice.

National License For Railroads.

The most vital need is in connection with the railroads. As to these, in my judgment, there should now be either a national incorporation act or a law licensing railway companies to engage in interstate commerce upon certain conditions. The law should be so framed as to give to the interstate commerce commission power to pass upon the future issue of securities, while ample means should be provided to enable the commission whenever in its judgment it is necessary to make a physical valuation of any railroad. As I stated in my message to the congress a year ago, railroads should be given power to enter into agreements subject to these agreements being made public in minute detail and to the consent of the interstate commerce commission being first obtained. Until the national government assumes proper control of interstate commerce in the exercise of the authority it already possesses it will be impossible either to give to or to get from the railroads full justice. The railroads and all other great corporations will do well to recognize that this control must come. The only question is as to what governmental body can most wisely exercise it. The courts will determine the limits within which the federal authority can exercise it, and there will still remain ample work within each state for the railway commission of that state, and the national interstate commerce commission will work in harmony with the several state commissions, each within its own province, to achieve the desired end.

The Antitrust Law.

Moreover, in my judgment, there should be additional legislation looking to the proper control of the great business concerns engaged in interstate business, this control to be exercised for their own benefit and prosperity no less than for the protection of investors and of the general public. As I have repeatedly said in messages to congress and elsewhere, experience has definitely shown not merely the unwisdom, but the futility, of endeavoring to put a stop to all business combinations. Modern industrial conditions are such that combination is not only necessary, but inevitable. It is so in the world of business just as it is so in the world of labor, and it is as idle to desire to put an end to all corporations, to all big combinations of capital, as to desire to put an end to combinations of labor. Corporation and labor union alike have come to stay. Each if properly managed is a source of good and not evil. Whenever in either there is evil it should be promptly held to account, but it should receive hearty encouragement so long as it is properly managed. It is profoundly immoral to put or keep on the statute books a law nominally in the interest of public morality that really puts a premium upon public immorality by undertaking to forbid honest men from doing what must be done under modern business conditions so that the law itself provides that its own infraction must be the condition precedent upon business success. To aim at the accomplishment of too much usually means the accomplishment of too little and often the doing of positive damage.

Not Repeal, but Amendment.

The antitrust law should not be repealed, but it should be made both more efficient and more in harmony with actual conditions. It should be so amended as to forbid only the kind of combination which does harm to the general public, such amendment to be accompanied by or to be an incident of a grant of supervisory power to the government over these big concerns engaged in interstate business. This should be accompanied by provision for the compulsory publication of accounts and the subjection of books and papers to the inspection of the government officials. A beginning has already been made for such supervision by the establishment of the bureau of corporations.

The antitrust law should not prohibit combinations that do no injustice to the public, still less those the existence of which is on the whole of benefit to the public. But even if this feature of the law were abolished there would remain as an equally objectionable feature the difficulty and delay now incident to its enforcement. The government must now submit to irksome and repeated delay before obtaining a final decision of the courts upon proceedings instituted, and even a favorable decree may mean an empty victory. Moreover, to attempt to control these corporations by lawsuits means to impose upon both the department of justice and the courts an impossible burden. It is not feasible to carry on more than a limited number of such suits. Such a law to be really effective must of course be administered by an executive body and not merely by means of lawsuits. The design should be to prevent the abuses incident to the creation of unhealthy and improper combinations instead of waiting until they are in existence and then attempting to destroy them by civil or criminal proceedings.

Law Should Be Explicit.

A combination should not be tolerated if it abuse the power acquired by combination to the public detriment. No corporation or association of any kind should be permitted to engage in foreign or interstate commerce that is formed for the purpose of or whose operations create a monopoly or general control of the production, sale or distribution of any one or more of the prime necessities of life or articles of general use and necessity. Such combinations are against public policy. They violate the common law. The doors of the courts are closed to those who are parties to them, and I believe the congress can close the channels of interstate commerce against them for its protection. The law should make its prohibitions and permissions as clear and definite as possible, leaving the least possible room for arbitrary action or allegation of such action on the part of the executive or of divergent interpretations by the courts.

Among the points to be aimed at should be the prohibition of unhealthy competition, such as by rendering service at an actual loss for the purpose of crushing out competition, the prevention of inflation of capital and the prohibition of a corporation's making exclusive trade with itself a condition of having any trade with itself. Reasonable agreements between or combinations of corporations should be permitted provided they are first submitted to and approved by some appropriate government body.

Congress' Power.

The congress has the power to charter corporations to engage in interstate and foreign commerce, and a general law can be enacted under the provisions of which existing corporations could take out federal charters and new federal corporations could be created. An essential provision of such a law should be a method of predetermining by some federal board or commission whether the applicant for a federal charter was an association or combination within the restrictions of the federal law. Provision should also be made for complete publicity in all matters affecting the public and complete protection to the investing public and the shareholders in the matter of issuing corporate securities. If an incorporation law is not deemed advisable, a license act for big interstate corporations might be enacted or a combination of the two might be tried. The supervision established might be analogous to that now exercised over national banks. At least the antitrust act should be supplemented by specific prohibitions of the methods which experience has shown have been of most service in enabling monopolistic combinations to crush out competition.

The real owners of a corporation should be compelled to do business in their own name. The right to hold stock in other corporations should hereafter be denied to interstate corporations, unless on approval by the proper government officials, and a prerequisite to such approval should be the listing with the government of all owners and stockholders, both by the corporation owning such stock and by the corporation in which such stock is owned.

Lessons of Recent Crisis.

To confer upon the national government in connection with the amendment I advocate in the antitrust law power of supervision over big business concerns engaged in interstate commerce would benefit them as it has benefited the national banks. In the recent business crisis it is noteworthy that the institutions which failed were institutions which were not under the supervision and control of the national government. Those which were under national control stood the test.

National control of the kind above advocated would be to the benefit of every well managed railway. From the standpoint of the public there is need for additional tracks, additional terminals and improvements in the actual handling of the railroads, and all this as rapidly as possible. Ample, safe and speedy transportation facilities are even more necessary than cheap transportation. Therefore there is need for the investment of money which will provide for all these things while at the same time securing as far as is possible better wages and shorter hours for their employees. Therefore, while there must be just and reasonable regulation of rates, we should be the first to protest against any arbitrary and unthinking movement to cut them down without the fullest and most careful consideration of all interests concerned and of the actual needs of the situation. Only a special body of men acting for the national government under authority conferred upon it by the congress is competent to pass judgment on such a matter.

Those who fear from any reason the extension of federal activity will do well to study the history not only of the national banking act, but of the pure food law, and notably the meat inspection law recently enacted. The pure food law was opposed so violently that its passage was delayed for a decade, yet it has worked unmixed and immediate good. The meat inspection law was even more violently assailed, and the same men who now denounce the attitude of the national government in seeking to oversee and control the workings of interstate common carriers and business concerns then asserted that we were "discrediting and ruining a great American industry." Two years have not elapsed, and already it has become evident that the great benefit the law confers upon the public is accompanied by an equal benefit to the reputable packing establishments. The latter are better off under the law than they were without it. The benefit to interstate common carriers and business concerns from the legislation I advocate would be equally marked.

Pure Food Law.

Incidentally in the passage of the pure food law the action of the various state food and dairy commissioners showed in striking fashion how much good for the whole people results from the hearty co-operation of the federal and state officials in securing a given reform. It is primarily to the action of these state commissioners that we owe the enactment of this law, for they aroused the people, first to demand the enactment and enforcement of state laws on the subject and then the enactment of the federal law, without which the state laws were largely ineffective. There must be the closest co-operation between the national and state governments in administering these laws.

Currency Legislation Needed.

I again urge on the congress the need of immediate attention to this matter. We need a greater elasticity in our currency, provided of course that we recognize the even greater need of a safe and secure currency. Provision should be made for an emergency currency. The emergency issue should of course be made with an effective guarantee and upon conditions carefully prescribed by the government. Such emergency issue must be based on adequate securities approved by the government and must be issued under a heavy tax. This would permit currency being issued when the demand for it was urgent, while securing its retirement as the demand fell off. It is worth investigating to determine whether officers and directors of national banks should ever be allowed to loan to themselves. Trust companies should be subject to the same supervision as banks. Legislation to this effect should be enacted for the District of Columbia and the territories.

Let us trust and remember that even the wisest legislation on the subject can only accomplish a certain amount. No legislation can by any possibility guarantee the business community against the results of speculative folly any more than it can guarantee an individual against the results of his extravagance. When an individual mortgages his house to buy an automobile he invites disaster, and when wealthy men or men who pose as such or are unscrupulously or foolishly eager to become such indulge in reckless speculation, especially if it is accompanied by dishonesty, they jeopardize not only their own future, but the future of all their innocent fellow citizens, for they expose the whole business community to panic and distress.

Can't Revise Tariff Now.

This country is definitely committed to the protective system, and any effort to uproot it could not but cause widespread industrial disaster. In other words, the principle of the present tariff law could not with wisdom be changed. But in a country of such phenomenal growth as ours it is probably well that every dozen years or so the tariff laws should be carefully scrutinized so as to see that no excessive or improper benefits are conferred thereby, that proper revenue is provided and that our foreign trade is encouraged. There must always be as a minimum a tariff which will not only allow for the collection of an ample revenue, but which will at least make good the difference in cost of production here and abroad—that is, the difference in the labor cost here and abroad, for the well being of the wage-worker must ever be a cardinal point of American policy. The question should be approached purely from a business standpoint, both the time and the manner of the change being such as to arouse the minimum of agitation and disturbance in the business world and to give the least play for selfish and factional motives. The sole consideration should be to see that the sum total of changes represents the public good. This means that the subject cannot with wisdom be dealt with in the year preceding a presidential election, because as a matter of fact experience has conclusively shown that at such a time it is impossible to get men to treat it from the standpoint of the public good. In my judgment the wise time to deal with the matter is immediately after such election.

Income Tax and Inheritance Tax.

When our tax laws are revised the question of an income tax and an inheritance tax should receive the careful attention of our legislators. In my judgment, both of these taxes should be part of our system of federal taxation. I speak diffidently about the income tax because one scheme for an income tax was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court, while in addition it is a difficult tax to administer in its practical working, and great care would have to be exercised to see that it was not evaded by the very men whom it was most desirable to have taxed. Nevertheless a graduated income tax of the proper type would be a desirable feature of federal taxation, and it is to be hoped that one may be devised which the supreme court will declare constitutional.

The inheritance tax, however, is a far better method of taxation. The government has the absolute right to decide as to the terms upon which a man shall receive a bequest from another, and this point in the devolution of property is especially appropriate for the imposition of a tax. Laws imposing such taxes have repeatedly been placed upon the national statute books and as repeatedly declared constitutional by the courts, and these laws contained the progressive principle—that is, after a certain amount is reached the bequest or gift in life or death is increasingly burdened and the rate of taxation is increased in proportion to the remoteness of blood of the man receiving the bequest. These principles are recognized already in the leading civilized nations of the world.

Germany's Inheritance Tax.

The German law is especially interesting to us because it makes the inheritance tax an imperial measure while alloting to the individual states of the empire a portion of the proceeds and permitting them to impose taxes in addition to those imposed by the imperial government. Small inheritances are exempt, but the tax is so sharply progressive that when the inheritance is still not very large, provided it is not an agricultural or a forest land, it is taxed at the rate of 25 per cent if it goes to distant relatives. There is no reason why in the United States the national government should not impose inheritance taxes in addition to those imposed by the states, and when we last had an inheritance tax about one-half of the states levied such taxes concurrently with the national government, making a combined maximum rate in some cases as high as 25 per cent.

To Tax Nonresidents Higher.

The tax should if possible be made to bear more heavily upon those residing without the country than within it. A heavy progressive tax upon a very large fortune is in no way such a tax upon thrift or industry as a like tax would be on a small fortune. No advantage comes either to the country as a whole or to the individuals inheriting the money by permitting the transmission in their entirety of the enormous fortunes which would be affected by such a tax, and as an incident to its function of revenue raising such a tax would help to preserve a measurable equality of opportunity for the people of the generations growing to manhood.

We have not the slightest sympathy with that socialistic idea which would try to put laziness, thriftlessness and inefficiency on a par with industry, thrift and efficiency, which would strive to break up not merely private property, but, what is far more important, the home, the chief prop upon which our whole civilization stands.

Such a theory if ever adopted would mean the ruin of the entire country, but proposals for legislation such as this herein advocated are directly opposed to this class of socialistic theories.

Enforcement of the Law.

A few years ago there was loud complaint that the law could not be invoked against wealthy offenders. There is no such complaint now. The course of the department of justice during the last few years has been such as to make it evident that no man stands above the law, that no corporation is so wealthy that it cannot be held to account. Everything that can be done under the existing law and with the existing state of public opinion, which so profoundly influences both the courts and juries, has been done, but the laws themselves need strengthening. They should be made more definite, so that no honest man can be led unwittingly to break them and so that the real wrongdoer can be readily punished.

Moreover, there must be the public opinion back of the laws or the laws themselves will be of no avail. The two great evils in the execution of our criminal laws today are sentimentality and technicality. For the latter the remedy must come from the hands of the legislatures, the courts and the lawyers. The other must depend for its cure upon the gradual growth of a sound public opinion which shall insist that regard for the law and the demands of reason shall control all other influences and emotions in the jury box. Both of these evils must be removed or public discontent with the criminal law will continue.

Injunctions.

Instances of abuse in the granting of injunctions in labor disputes continue to occur, and the resentment in the minds of those who feel that their rights are being invaded and their liberty of action and of speech unwarrantably restrained continues likewise to grow. Much of the attack on the use of the process of injunction is wholly without warrant, but I am constrained to express the belief that for some of it there is warrant. This question is becoming one of prime importance, and unless the courts will deal with it in effective manner it is certain ultimately to demand some form of legislative action. It would be most unfortunate for our social welfare if we should permit many honest and law abiding citizens to feel that they had just cause for regarding our courts with hostility. I earnestly commend to the attention of the congress this matter, so that some way may be devised which will limit the abuse of injunctions and protect those rights which from time to time it unwarrantably invades. Moreover, discontent is often expressed with the use of the process of injunction by the courts, not only in labor disputes, but where state laws are concerned. I refrain from discussion of this question as I am informed that it will soon receive the consideration of the supreme court.

The process of injunction is an essential adjunct of the court's doing its work well, and as preventive measures are always better than remedial the wise use of this process is from every standpoint commendable. But where it is recklessly or unnecessarily used the abuse should be censured, above all by the very men who are properly anxious to prevent any effort to shear the courts of this necessary power. The court's decision must be final. The protest is only against the conduct of individual judges in needlessly anticipating such final decision or in the tyrannical use of what is nominally a temporary injunction to accomplish what is in fact a permanent decision.

The president urges the passage of a model employers' liability act for the District of Columbia and the territories to encourage corporations to treat injured wageworkers better. He emphatically indorses the eight hour day.

The president urges the states to fight the child and woman labor evil. He says:

The national government has as an ultimate resort for control of child labor the use of the interstate commerce clause to prevent the products of child labor from entering into interstate commerce. But before using this it ought certainly to enact model laws on the subject for the territories under its own immediate control.

Presidential Campaign Expenses.

Under our form of government voting is not merely a right, but a duty, and, moreover, a fundamental and necessary duty if a man is to be a good citizen. It is well to provide that corporations shall not contribute to presidential or national campaigns and, furthermore, to provide for the publication of both contributions and expenditures. There is, however, always danger in laws of this kind, which from their very nature are difficult of enforcement, the danger being lest they be obeyed only by the honest and disobeyed by the unscrupulous, so as to act only as a penalty upon honest men. Moreover, no such law would hamper an unscrupulous man of unlimited means from buying his own way into office. There is a very radical measure which would, I believe, work a substantial improvement in our system of conducting a campaign, although I am well aware that it will take some time for people so to familiarize themselves with such a proposal as to be willing to consider its adoption. The need for collecting large campaign funds would vanish if congress provided an appropriation for the proper and legitimate expenses of each of the great national parties, an appropriation ample enough to meet the necessity for thorough organization and machinery which requires a large expenditure of money. Then the stipulation should be made that no party receiving campaign funds from the treasury should accept more than a fixed amount from any individual subscriber or donor, and the necessary publicity for receipts and expenditures could without difficulty be provided.

The Army.

The president recommends legislation to increase the number of officers in the army, especially in the medical corps. The rate of pay of officers should be greatly increased, he declares. There should be a relatively even greater increase in the rate of pay of enlisted men if we are to keep the army in shape to be effective in time of need. The president recommends severe examination of officers for promotion up to the rank of major. From that point promotion should be purely by selection. He speaks of the recent physical test of army officers with emphatic approbation and recommends a bill equalizing the pay of officers and men of the army, navy, marine corps and revenue cutter service.

The Navy.

Concerning the navy the president says:

In my judgment, we should this year provide for four battleships. But it is idle to build battleships unless, in addition to providing the men and the means for thorough training, we provide the auxiliaries for them—unless we provide docks, the coaling stations, the colliers and supply ships that they need. We are extremely deficient in coaling stations and docks on the Pacific, and this deficiency should not longer be permitted to exist. Plenty of torpedo boats and destroyers should be built. Both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts fortifications of the best type should be provided for all our greatest harbors.

Until our battle fleet is much larger than at present it should never be split into detachments so far apart that they could not in event of emergency be speedily united. Our coast line is on the Pacific just as much as on the Atlantic. The battle fleet should now and then be moved to the Pacific, just as at other times it should be kept in the Atlantic. When the isthmian canal is built the transit of the battle fleet from one ocean to the other will be comparatively easy. Until it is built I earnestly hope that the battle fleet will be thus shifted between the two oceans every year or two. The battle fleet is about starting by the strait of Magellan to visit the Pacific coast. Sixteen battleships are going under the command of Rear Admiral Evans, while eight armored cruisers and two other battleships will meet him in San Francisco, whither certain torpedo destroyers are also going. No fleet of such size has ever made such a voyage, and it will be of very great educational use to all engaged in it. The only way by which to teach officers and men how to handle the fleet so as to meet every possible strain and emergency in time of war is to have them practice under similar conditions in time of peace.

The president recommends the increased pay for both officers and enlisted men and advises promotion by selection above the grade of lieutenant commander.

Foreign Affairs.

In foreign affairs, the president says, this country's steady policy is to behave toward other nations as a strong and self respecting man should behave toward the other men with whom he is brought into contact. In other words, our aim is disinterestedly to help other nations where such help can be wisely given without the appearance of meddling with what does not concern us, to be careful to act as a good neighbor and at the same time in good natured fashion to make it evident that we do not intend to be imposed upon.

The president refers at length to The Hague peace conference. He believes it accomplished much good work.

Postal Savings Banks.

The president says on postal affairs:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the congress a postal savings bank system as recommended by the postmaster general. Timid depositors have withdrawn their savings for the time being from national banks, trust companies and savings banks, individuals have hoarded their cash and the workingmen their earnings, all of which money has been withheld and kept in hiding or in the safe deposit box to the detriment of prosperity. Through the agency of the postal savings banks such money would be restored to the channels of trade, to the mutual benefit of capital and labor.

I further commend to the congress the consideration of the postmaster general's recommendation for an extension of the parcel post, especially on the rural routes. It would be a most desirable thing to put the fourth class postmasters in the classified service.

Other recommendations are:

Deepening of the inland waterways, especially of the Mississippi river system, to make them great national highways.

The repeal of the tariff on forest products, especially the duty on wood pulp.

The amendment of the public land laws to make them more effective against land grabbers and more favorable to bona fide settlers.

Retention of the government's title to public coal and other mineral lands.

Extension of the national forest reserves.

Citizenship for the people of Porto Rico.

Freer local self government for Alaska.

COUNTY AND STATE TAXES PAID BY CITY

Among the routine matters reported at the December meeting of the Common Council last night, was a petition from the Public Service Corporation stating that the light ordered in front of the West End Tabernacle had been placed in position. Residents of Spruce street complained that there is no sewer in that thoroughfare and not a light on the block. They petitioned for one light and inquired for information as to how sewers can be obtained. The petition was referred to the street and sewer committee.

A resolution offered by Mr. Hibbard and adopted authorized City Treasurer W. F. Arnold to draw a warrant for $1,404.30 with which to pay the city's share of the State and county tax. Another resolution by Mr. Hibbard which was adopted ordered paid the claim of $100, that being the premium on the bond of Tax Collector William R. Townsend. When Council adjourned it did so to meet Monday night, December 9.

The request of Codington & Swackhamer for permission to use the council chamber on Monday, December 9, when Vice-Chancellor Walker will conduct a chancery suit, was granted, the law firm to be informed that the Common Council will meet in the evening of that day.

Ellen Gray and others of Stebbins place petitioned for a light, stating that there had been one on that street, but for some reason had been removed. Later on motion of Chairman Montgomery of the light committee one light was granted. It was learned that the lamp referred to was formerly used by the Public Service Corporation near the car barns, but when the structure was demolished it was taken away. After this explanation by Mr. Buxton the petition was readily granted.

Dorothea M. Stewart, of East Seventh street, asked for the return of $20 out of $26 that she paid in taxes on her property, claiming that the amount did not represent an equitable assessment. The matter was referred to the finance committee.

E. D. McCarthy complained that he did not have a dog for which he was taxed $2 in 1906 and asked to have that amount deducted from his tax bill. On motion of Mr. Tyler this was ordered done by the tax collector.

The petition of Foster Callahan for an extension of time to April 30 to complete sanitary sewer work contracted by him was granted on motion of Mr. Gloak.

Clerk Horace G. Adams, of the district court, reported receipts for the past month to be $158.17 and expenditures $47.42, leaving a balance of $110.75. City Engineer Gavett reported that thirty-eight sewer permits were granted during the October and November, and Building Inspector T. O. Doane reported that twenty-one permits were granted during the past month.

Saved by His Derby Hat.

A derby hat, worn by Randolph Thorn, a tinner, saved him from serious injury after noon today, when a heavy section of leader pipe, being removed from the roof of the building adjourning H. E. Gayle's hardware store on Park avenue, crashed down three stories, striking him on the head. The pipe, which had just been removed from the roof to be replaced by a new length, slipped from the hand of an assistant and fell to the street. Thorn was struck squarely on the head by the end of the pipe but the force of the blow was deflected by the derby hat which he wore. The hat was crushed to a wreck, and Thorn's head was painfully cut by the force of the blow. The wound was dressed and the man was able to continue with his work.

Trinity Commandery Inspected.

The annual inspection of Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., was held in Masonic Hall, last night. It was attended by many visitors from out of town and was followed by a collation.

CITY ENGINEER GIVES RUSH ORDERS ON STREET WORK.

City Engineer Gavett gave Contractor Meeker instructions this morning to hasten his work on cleaning up the streets where the brick pavement has been laid and to rush the work remaining to be completed as fas as possible. The concreting process is progressing on West Front street, the idea being to complete the work between the tracks as far as Madison avenue to cover the concrete foundation with tar paper to prevent frost reaching it. This will be done until the brick pavers get ready to start their work.

It is expected that the pavement at Front and Somerset streets will be finished today and the pavers will then complete Watchung avenue. By that time West Front street will be ready for them. When this pavement is finished the portion of the streets outside the trolley tracks will be repaired and laid even with the brick pavement for the winter months so that traffic will not be interferred with.

Burning Ice Houses Made Glare.

Fire, believed to be of incendiary origin, destroyed the two ice houses on the old John Lambert farm, near Alton, early last night. The glare was plainly visible from this city at about 6 o'clock. Simeon Lambert, who occupies the place, did not discover the fire until it was too late to save the buildings. The loss is estimated at about $1,200, and there was no insurance. The buildings were empty. This is the fourth fire of unexplained origin within a short time, and the farmers are uneasy, fearing incendiaries.

Mrs. Jane S. Grace.

Mrs. Jane S. Grace, a former resident of Fanwood, died Saturday at her home on Riverside Drive, New York, aged sixty-eight years. She leaves two sons, Frederick Grace and Lee Ashley Grace, the latter the son-in-law of L. V. F. Randolph. She was an aunt to Mrs. O. L. Jenkins, of this city. The funeral was held in New York this morning and burial will be in the Scotch Plains cemetery this afternoon.

Councilman Tolles in the Chair

President Leslie M. Daniel was detained from last night's Common Council session by illness and Councilman R. I. Tolles, chairman of the finance committee, occupied the chair. It was expected that Chairman Ginna of the street committee might have something to say about street improvement work, but he was called away early in the evening and did not attend the meeting.

READ THIS!
From a Prominent New York Newspaper:

"In this hustling, bustling age of ours, where every second has a commercial value, the telephone plays a most important part. Without it the activities of the day would not be possible and business would proceed at the sober pace which characterized it some fifty years ago. And yet although most people will realize the truth of these assertions, few appreciate the enormous void which would be left were the telephone to be suddenly wiped out of existence."

BIG WATERWAY SYSTEM.

Three Thousand Six Hundred Miles of River Accounted For.

An old river pilot, in discussing the presidents voyage down the river from St. Louis to Memphis, says that very little idea of the western system of waterways can be gained from so short a voyage.

"The distance from St. Louis to Cairo is 198 miles; from Cairo to Memphis, 241 miles, so that the president saw only 439 miles of our western system below St. Louis.

"Now, the Ohio river from Pittsburg to Cairo, is 965 miles; the Kanawha is 72 miles; the Tennessee river, from its mouth to Florence, Ala., is 256 miles; the Mississippi, from St. Paul to Cairo, is 926 miles, and from Cairo to New Orleans, just 1,000. The Missouri river from St. Louis to Kansas City, is 386 miles, and above that point is navigable for nearly 2,000 miles more.

"Leaving out of the account, however, the upper Missouri, the Minnesota, Illinois, Arkansas, Red River and several others, some of which are navigable for considerable distances, there are in the main streams over 3,600 miles of water course, navigable nearly three-fourths of the year, and of this the president will see only a little more than one-ninth. It is inconceivable that so magnificent a system of water highways should be neglected, and the president's voyage, although it covers so small a part of the entire system, ought to be the beginning of a new era in river transportation."

NEW POISON TEST.

Paddy Could Try It On the Cat at Less Expense.

An Irish laborer entered a drug store, and, drawing a paper bag from his pocket, he poured on the counter a number of very sticky and unpalatable-looking candy lozenges.

"Can ye examine thim swates?" he asked.

"They look queer. What is the matter with them?" inquired the druggist.

"Pizen, Oi'm a-thinkin'. Did ye iver see such stuff? Dinnis Daly give thim to me bye, and Dinnis is no frind of mine."

"Well, I can make an analysis."

The Irishman had reached the door, but he suddenly stopped with his hand on the latch.

"And how much will thot 'nalysis be costin' me?" he inquired.

"Five dollars," was the answer.

Paddy walked over to the counter, and swept the lozenges into the bag which he replaced in his pocket.

"Niver moind," he said. "Niver moind. Oi'll fade wan to the cat."

"CLEVERALITY."

A Little Descriptive Stroke by Charlotte Bronte.

There is a story that Charlotte Bronte, when a girl of 16, broke out very angrily at some one who said she was always talking about clever people, such as Johnson and Sheridan. "Now, you don't know the meaning of clever," she said; "Sheridan might be clever—scamps often are; but Johnson hadn't a spark of 'cleverality' in him." That remark really gives the essence of Johnson and the key to the great qualities of his work; for, in his case, even more than in most, the prose was the man. Whoever wants "cleverality," whoever wants what Mr. Beranard Shaw is supplying to the present generation, had best leave Johnson alone. The signal merit of Johnson's writings is that he always means what he says and always says what he means. He may often have talked for victory; but, except, perhaps, in the political pamphlets, he always wrote for truth.

The Missing Link.

Some years ago remains of an apelike creature possessing unusual human resemblances were discovered in Java, and the animal was named pithecanthropus. Professor Haeckel and some others accepted this as representing an ancestral human form closely allied to the apes. Now a special expedition, under the combined auspices of the Academy of Sciences of Berlin and the Dutch East Indies government, is being organized to make a thorough exploration of Java in search of additional specimens of pithecanthropus. The geological formation in which the original discovery was made is widely extended among the mountains of that island.—Youth's Companion.

Knew Her Own Mind.

Mrs. Perry thoughtfully regarded the package the maid had just brought in, and then remarked to her husband that she had menat to buy a mauve broche, says the Youth's Companion.

"What did you get?" he asked.

"Pink louisine."

Her husband could not quite conceal a significant smile, and Mrs. Perry went on hurriedly: "I know what you are thinking, Joe—that I don't know my own mind. But I can prove that I do.

"Did you ever know me to go to a grocery and bring away a can of peaches instead of a bar of soap? Certainly not!" she exclaimed, triumphantly.

BEES MARK MAN'S COMING.

Wild Ones All Descended from Those Once Domesticated.

All the honey bees in this country having originally been imported from Europe or Asia, there is no racial difference between the wild ones and the domesticated; those that live in trees are simply the descendants of those that from time to time have taken "French leave" from their owners' hives and reverted to a state of nature. The vast bulk of the wild bees are of the German or black race, while the standard domesticated bee is the Italian; but that, however, is only because the Germans were the first to be introduced here. Just when the Germans came is in doubt, but it was some time in the seventeenth century; certainly it was not until near the close of the eighteenth century that any bees were found west of the Mississippi. The Indians used to say they could mark the advance of the white man by the appearance of bees in the woods. The Italian bees were first imported in 1860. Better tempered and more industrious than the Germans, they have become popular with apiraists; but as many still keep the German bee, and others have the hybrid formed by the crossing of the two races, while countless Italians now have taken to the woods, there to breed more hybrids, it is clear that there is no sure way of distinguishing between the wild bee and the domesticated.—Outing Magazine.

PENALTIES OF GREAT PLACE.

Thrice Servants Those Who Have Risen to High Estate.

Men in great place are thrice servants—servants of the sovereign or state, servants of fame, and servants of business; so as they have no freedom neither in their persons, nor in their actions, nor in their times. It is a strange desire to seek power, and to lose liberty, or to seek power over others and to lose power over a man's self. The rising unto place is laborious, and by pains men come to greater pains, and it is sometimes base and by indignities men come to dignities. The standing is slippery and the regret is either a downfall or at least an eclipse, which is a melancholy thing. "Cum non sis qui fueris, non esse cur velis vivere." (Since you are not what you were, there is no reason why you should wish to live.) Nay, retire—men cannot when they would, neither will they when it were reason; but are impatient of privateness even in age and sickness which requires the shadow; like old townsmen, that will be still sitting at their street door, though thereby they offer age to scorn.—From Lord Bacon's Essay, "Of Great Place."

The Style in Clocks.

"There are funny things about the clock business," said the salesman from Connecticut. "Nine-tenths of the clocks that I sold on my last trip were eight-day clocks. Everybody seems to have serious objections nowadays to winding clocks. If I could provide customers with 30-day clocks or 60-day clocks, without too much additional cost, they would prefer them. The demand for long-distance timepieces represents a decided change in taste. A year or so ago everybody was clamoring for 24-hour clocks, on the ground that they kept better time. Now, if I could put on the market some of those one-year and five-year clocks that venturesome manufacturers turn out now and then as curiosities they would prove ready sellers."

Easy Entertaining.

One woman who does her own work and yet likes to entertain a good deal has brought order out of chaos and made the work lighter for herself by limiting her dinner to three hot dishes. She serves first iced cantaloupe, grape fruit or oysters, according to the season; then meat, potatoes and one vegetable. Salad and dessert are prepared beforehand, and so is the coffee. She serves all but the three hot dishes—which, of course must be brought from the kitchen—from a small serving table at her side, which has two shelves beneath it and an outstanding bracket shelf for the clean and used dishes. The coffee, in a French coffee pot, stands on one of the brackets of the serving table and boils merrily until required.

Mistakes We Make.

Moths do not eat furs or cloths. They lay their eggs in these rich stuffs, and it is the worm from the eggs that do the eating. There are no shooting stars. Stars are immense bodies, many times larger than the earth. The so-called shooting stars that glide so splendidly across the nocturnal sky are meteors—fragments weighing as a rule, but a few pounds. Sunstroke is really heat apoplexy. It is the moisture in the air, rather than the actual rays of the sun, that causes sunstroke. In dry climates, such as Cairo's with a summer temperature of 122 degrees in the shade, sunstroke is much rarer than with us.

Modern Turpentine Gather

Twenty million turpentine cups are used in the pine forests of the South to catch the flow of sap from the trees, and 7,000,000 or 8,000,000 are added each year. The earthenware cups, which are of various sizes and pots in size and shape, are rapid and highly injurious to the American method of gathering turpentine, due to the economy in using all the wood possible for the application of the cups, an old-fashioned industry.

Thousands will give books at Christmas time. Thousands will buy them here. We have gathered what is surely the most representative and satisfying lines of Holiday Books we have ever presented. The stock is simply enormous. Table after table, covering a space as big as many entire Broad street stores, and lines of shelves on either side, are crowded to the edge with giveable books.

It is a collection that embraces practically every good thing the big publishers have bought out this season, from the elaborately illustrated, richly bound volumes to the simplest rag book for the tiniest tot. Whether you intend buying only a single volume, enough books for a Sunday-school or books to stock a library, we can serve you best and for the least money.

High School Teachers to Meet.

The semi-annual convention of the State High School Teachers' Association will be held in Newark Saturday, at which time Principal Ira W. Travell of the city high school, will make his report as chairman of the welfare committee of the association. The sessions, which will be attended by many of the teachers of the city and borough, will be held in the public library, and a feature of the convention this year is to be an address by Louis Pevear, Jr., State high school inspector. Mr. Pevear will speak on "The Present High School Situation."

Columbia Professor Lectured.

George B. Strayer, Ph. D., a professor at Columbia University, gave a lecture on "Teaching Children to Study" at the Westfield high school yesterday afternoon, which was attended by Superintendent Henry M. Maxson, of the local schools, and about half a dozen teachers from this city. The lecture is the third of a series of eighteen arranged by the county superintendent of schools and principals of the Union county public schools to be given by members of the Columbia University faculty in near-by schools.

Eight New Members.

Eight persons became members of Warren chapel at the communion service held at the church Sunday morning.

Y. M. C. A. WINS CLOSE GAME

Beat Pick-up Team from Orange in Last Minutes of Play, Score 47-34

LOCAL LEAGUE PLAY STARTED.

Business Men Win from Congregational Church Five in One-Sided Game, 27-9.

The Y. M. C. A. basketball five had the satisfaction of trimming a pick-up team from the Orange Y. M. C. A. on the local gymnasium floor last night as a bit of salve for their defeat at Orange in the State Y. M. C. A. league Saturday night. Closely contested from start to finish, the local five took a big brace near the end of the second half and, shooting several baskets in quick succession, clinched the game, 47-34. In the first game of the local league, played before the Orange game, the business men won easily from the Congregational church five by a score of 27-9.

Plainfield, 47; Orange, 34.

In a game which was not decided until the final whistle, a picked team from the Orange Y. M. C. A. were finally defeated by the local team after the business men's game last night. The visitors brought only four men, and Fred Martin, of the local association's second team, went in at centre for Orange. Hand, who played left forward for the visitors, is a former member of the local association, and captain of last year's championship five at Orange. Superior to the local players in passing and in long shots, the visitors were a tough proposition, at several times being in the lead, once by a four point margin. At the end of the first half the score was 19-18 in favor of the local team. Loizeaux, who shot eleven baskets during the game, was the first to score, caging the ball after several minutes of fast play. In the second half, when Plainfield was a few points in the lead, the local five clinched the game by scoring several baskets in succession. After this whirlwind of scoring was over, it was discovered that Martin, of the Orange team, had left the floor. The line-ups and summaries:

PLAINFIELD.		ORANGE.
Gilmore	right forward	Leimer
Collier	centre	Martin
Hoaland, Miner	right guard	McElnee

Baskets: Loizeaux, 11; Gilmore 5; Collier, 5; Patten, 4; Leimer, 3; Hand, 3; McElnee, 3; Patten, Gavett, Miner. Goals from fouls: Hand, 4. Twenty minute halves.

Business Men, 27; Congregationalists, 9.

The business men had everything their own way during the entire game, leading throughout by a safe margin. At the end of the first half, the score was 15-1 in favor of the business men, a point having been awarded the church team for being fouled in an attempt to shoot a goal. The score:

Business Men.		Congregationalists.
Listman, Clark	right forward	Steiner
Dunning	centre	Adams
Jarvis	right guard	Newman

Baskets: Listman, 7; Doane 2; Clark, 2; Jarvis, 2; Steiner, 2; Bentley, Newman. Each side awarded a point for interfering while a goal was being shot. Fifteen minute halves.

Charles B. Morse acted as referee for both games. E. H. Patten, of Orange, was umpire. Dunning was timer.

BOWLING.

The Napoleon and Washington teams will meet in the tourney at Campbell's alleys tonight. The former five stands at the bottom of the list through losing three straight games to the Bismarcks but is counted upon to make a good showing. The Washingtons took two out of three in their match with the Wellingtons. The two teams will line up as follows: Napoleons, Frank Willett, captain; John Conklin, William Mullen, George Vanderbilt and Edward Toense; Washingtons, V. W. Nash, Jr., captain, William Skinner, George Ortleb, James O'Keefe and Rudulph Toense.

The local newspapermen's bowling team is getting in shape to begin a series with the Newark News pinhitters. In the games played last year the Newarkers won easily but the Plainfielders have been improving steadily and are confident of success. The first games will probably be rolled in this city the latter part of the month.

The tourney in progress at Campbell's alleys has roused great interest in the pin smashing game locally. Every series rolled is witnessed by a large crowd of rooters and the various bowlers are always urged on to their best effort by coteries of friends. The cheering frequently resembles baseball enthusiasm and the excitement is just as keen.

TEPPER'S Great Cash Realization Sale.

A SALE ABSOLUTE including stocks just received for Holiday Selling.

FOR 10 DAYS—TO CONVERT AS MUCH OF IT INTO CASH AS POSSIBLE WHILE THE SEASON IS AT ITS HEIGHT FOR YOUR WANTS.
10 DAYS—BEGINNING THURSDAY, DECEMBER 5, AND CONTINUING UNTIL DECEMBER 15.

A Step Heretofore Unknown in Plainfield Merchandising!

Nothing will be reserved, nothing will be spared from the onslaught on values. Every item in the house from the very smallest to the biggest will be sacrificed. Whether your needs begin with a paper of pins, or the article of much greater value, the price will be cut to make this a memorable event.

A Sale Incomparable in its Drastic Thoroughness!

Incomparable, because it's not the usual marking of a few bargains to help sell the greatest portion of the stock at regular prices. Its drastic thoroughness means that no matter what your needs, the articles have been gone over and marked to a bargain price. A Sale for Holiday Shoppers as well—this is an opportune time to purchase your holiday gifts—these stocks are all in and meet the same onslaught with the rest.

Dolls, Toys and Gifts for the Grown-ups, and all Arranged for You!

In inaugurating this sale we feel that while the primary cause is to convert a big stock into cash, it will also serve the purpose of supplying many homes with needed merchandise at a big saving just at a time when cash is needed to go farthest. We are not a sensational house. You have learned to know that every statement we make is absolutely dependable. We have guarded this principle closely in naming these prices below:

FOR INDUSTRIAL TRAINING

J. B. Betts, of this City, Tells State Board Why Such Instruction is Needed.

STATE SCHOOL TAX NECESSARY.

State Superintendent C. J. Baxter, Formerly of This City, Dwells at Length On the Subject.

The New Jersey State Board of Education, after a number of preliminary committee meetings, which have been in session since Saturday, held its regular meeting as a whole at Lakewood yesterday. Subject to approval by the State Legislature and pending a suitable money appropriation by that body, the Board appointed Charles S. Chapin, at present superintendent of public schools at Providence, R. I., to the superintendency of the new State Normal School at Montclair. The appointment will have to be confirmed by the Legislature before it can go into effect.

The Board took preliminary action towards enlargement and addition to the course in industrial education.

"The aim," said J. B. Betts, of Plainfield, secretary of the Board, "is to introduce the educational methods of the State a more practical trend. We feel that so far as general public instruction goes, it is better to have a strong practical element on the work, and that it is better, for instance, to teach a boy how to be a good scientific farmer than to give his training the twist that will turn him into a poor lawyer or a worse doctor. In other words, the educational methods in our public schools should be such that they will help more than they have in the past that great mass who intend to do their life work along industrial lines."

The matter was referred to the committee on education and will be reported on at the next meeting of the board.

That the State school tax will have to be continued despite the expected revenue from the taxation of railroads was emphasized by State Superintendent Charles J. Baxter in a preliminary report made to the board yesterday. In his report Mr. Baxter set forth that the State school tax for the year ending June 30 last was $2,062,208.29. The fund from the State treasury was $1,079,519.42, and there was $200,000 from the State school fund available, while interest on the surplus was $27,412.80, making the total revenue for the year ending June 30 the sum of $3,367,140.01.

If the railroad tax fund had been available at that time there would have been received $2,530,867.35, which would make a total of $5,900,007.36.

Mr. Baxter pointed out that that amount was not near enough to run the schools, and the State school tax must continue. The salaries alone of the teachers during that period reached $6,181,475.13, and with the railroad fund deducted would amount to $281,467.77. The actual expense for the year for schools alone, without repairs being estimated and other incidentals, amounted to $9,132,242.80, and with the buildings and repairs and debt and interest added amounted to $3,710,876.06, making the actual tax for that period, he said, $7,485,751.87.

The State owns, Mr. Baxter said, 1,962 school buildings whose entire value is estimated at $27,284,539, making the average value of school buildings owner, $13,912. The increase in valuations over the year ending June 30 was $5,572,259.

FRATERNAL ORDER EAGLES ELECT THEIR OFFICERS.

At the regular meeting of Plainfield Arie, No. 866, Fraternal Order of Eagles, held in Eagles' Hall, East Second street, last evening, the following officers were elected: Past worthy president, D. V. Force; worthy president, R. P. Kampf; worthy vice president, Joseph Callahan; worthy chaplain, P. W. Guinee; worthy inside guard, D. Mack; worthy outside guard, J. H. Adams; worthy secretary, H. COLORED MAN HELD FOR STEALING SILVER

Edward Randolph, colored, of this city, was arrested on North avenue, last night, by Detective-Sergeant John Flynn, on suspicion of having stolen a case of silver-plated ware belonging to Miss Lizzie Brighton, colored, of Arlington avenue. The theft, it is presumed, occurred last Friday, and Miss Brighton reported it to the police. Detective Flynn was put on the case.

Yesterday Randolph visited Westfield and while there stole a raincoat from Taylor's livery stables belonging to Robert Sarla. When Detective Flynn met Randolph last night he questioned him about the coat. The colored man looked suspicious and wanted to know whether the officer had received a telephone message from Westfield. He was told that such a message had been received. It was afterward learned that the Westfield police were about to arrest a white man under suspicion, when informed that Randolph had the coat.

Randolph, it is said, sold the silverware, and the police expect to be able to return the goods to the owner today. The prisoner was held in $400 for the Grand Jury and in default of furnishing the amount was sent to Elizabeth.

LITTLE BACTERIA IN PLAINFIELD'S MILK

Much improvement was shown during November in the quality of the milk sold in Plainfield, according to the report of Health Officer Leon R. Thurlow at the December meeting of the Board of Health, yesterday. This was especially true of the bacteria, the average for all samples taken being 34,470 per cubic centimeter. The highest bacteria in any sample was 118,000 and 26 of the 40 samples were below 50,000. The average of the milk analysis for the month were as follows:

Fats, 4.06 per cent.; solids, 13.08; solids not fat, 9.02; lactemeter, 110; bacteria per cubic centimeter, 34.470.

The reports of the sanitary condition of the city show that the number of communicable disease during November was low; seven cases of scarlet fever and four of diphtheria being reported. Four of the sever cases of scarlet fever were in on family.

Considerable work was done on dairy inspection and milk analysis, the following inspections being made: Dairies, 27; bottling places, 14; stores selling milk, 38; a total of 79.

These permits were granted to sell milk: Harry Holland, R. H. Keenan J. M. Seigel, B. C. Firstbrook and Elder Trent; to carry on business of scavenger, T. M. Ingraham; to collect garbage, Charles Meyer, Ferando Brown and William Winkleholz; to collect offal, Swift & Co. The following returns were made during the month: Marriages, 18; births, 30; still-births, 1; deaths, 32.

REPORTS SHOW GROWTH OF ST. STEPHEN'S PARISH

The annual parish meeting of St. Stephen's Episcopal church, of Netherwood, was held at the close of a special service in the church last night. There was a good number of parishioners present and the annual reports of the various guilds and committees were read.

Rev. Arthur Searing Peck, rector of the church, made his annual report, expressing gratification upon the support tendered him during the past twelve months along all lines of parish work. The affairs of the parish, both religious and financial, are in a flourishing condition and there has been an encouraging growth in all branches of the parish work since last Advent.

The balloting for wardens and vestrymen, in accordance with the annual custom, resulted in the re-election of the present encumbents in each case. These are, senior warden, George Dupuy; junior warden, Adam C. Hill; vestrymen, Robert H. McCready, J. C. Haywood, Frederick L. Hebert, Alfred Lacey and William S. Crook. The rector will appoint delegates to the diocesan convention later.

Claims Promptly Settled.

Central Lodge, No. 48, Ancient Order United Workmen, has received two checks for $3,000 each from the Grand Lodge of that order in payment of claims in connection with the deaths of John J. Kinniery and Israel Goddu, of Central Lodge. Mr. Kinniery died November 19 and Mr. Goddu on November 21, both claims being settled with ten days of the time of death.

STATE FOOD COMMISSION

MISS LAKEY CHOSEN CHAIRMAN

Resolutions Are Adopted Requesting Federal Authorities to Call an International Congress to Deal With Question.

A State Food Commission, to protect consumers from infection in meat, milk and other foods and to enforce the national pure food laws, was organized at the close of the afternoon session of the pure food convention in the First Presbyterian church at Cranford yesterday. Miss Alice Lakey, chairman of the food committee, National Consumers' League, and the Cranford Food Committee, was elected chairman of the commission. More than sixty delegates from all sections of the State joined as members. The Monday afternoon Club of Plainfield was represented at the conference.

Resolutions were adopted requesting the United States Government to call an international pure food congress to consider uniform means for dealing with food and drug adulteration and misbranding; pointing out to the Governor and Legislature of New Jersey the urgent need for legislation and appropriation to provide for the inspection of local slaughtering-houses and the inspection of all animals both before and after slaughter, and the need of inspection to prevent the sale of milk from diseased animals and to eradicate tuberculosis and other diseases from dairy animals and to quarantine the State against the bringing in of cattle infected with tuberculosis; urging the Legislature to amend the State pure food law so as to go into effect at once; requesting county medical societies in the State to appoint milk commissions for the purpose of furnishing pure milk supply for infant feeding after the plan inaugurated by Dr. Colt, of this State; indorsing the work of Commissioner E. F. Ladd, of North Dakota, to have bleached flours labeled, so that the consumers may know when low grades or flour have been bleached to resemble the better grades, and protesting against the misuse of the guaranty clause in the national pure food law.

Another resolution was as follows: "Resolved, That since the Royal English Tuberculosis Commission has concluded that tuberculosis is transmitted to man through cows' milk, it becomes the duty of every citizen of every State to foster every means to prevent the production and sale of infected milk."

The convention opened with an address of welcome by Miss Lakey, after which greetings were given by Mrs. G. W. B. Cushing, president of the New Jersey Consumers' League; Mrs. Frederick Nathan, president of the New York City Consumers' League, and Mrs. Florence Kelley, executive secretary of the National Consumers' League.

The speakers in the afternoon were Professor Edward B. Voorhees, director of the New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station, on the "Sanitary Production of Milk from the Farmer's Standpoint;" Dr. W. D. Bigelow, chief of division of foods of the Bureau of Chemistry, Washington, D. C., on "Food Adulteration and Method of Detection;" Dr. Wm. Frear, State chemist, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, on "Food Standards;" Dr. Louis L. Seaman, late major-surgeon of the United States Volunteers, vice-president of the Pan-American Congress, on the "Danger Incurred from the Use of Improver Foods," and Dr. George Goler, of Rochester, N. Y., on "Impure Milk."

The evening session opened with an address of welcome by Mayor E. B. Horton. The principal speaker of the evening was Senator J. S. Frelinghuysen, on "Pure Food Legislation in New Jersey. R. M. Allan, secretary of State and National Food and Dairy Departments and chief of Food Division, Kentucky, spoke on "Co-operation Between State and National Food Officers;" Dr. A. D. Melvin, of Washington, D. C., on "Tuberculosis Meat," and James B. Reynolds on "Meat Inspection." Regrets were read from Senators Colby and Minch; Henry Mitchell, secretary of the State Board of Health; Governor Stokes and Dr. Thomas Darlington, of the New York Health Board.

Borough Cleans Away the Snow.

Street Commissioner Conover, of the borough, had a force of men cleaning the sidewalks, crosswalks and gutters of North Plainfield early this morning after the storm. The snow was removed from the sidewalks by plows drawn by horses, and the cross walks and gutters were shoveled clear by a force of men of the street department.

SENTENCE DAY IN COURT

Thomas Ryan Given 3 Years While Bail of Andrew Cozzi is Forfeited.

ENGLEMAN GETS SEVEN YEARS.

Arnold Stahl for Selling Indecent Postal Cards Is Fined $250—Pagnillo Given One Year.

This was sentence day in the Union County Court, and Judge Edward S. Atwater disposed of a number of cases, including a few from Plainfield. Thomas Ryan, of this city, found guilty of a heinous offense, was given three years in State prison.

LeRoy Brown, also of this city, found guilty of stealing a horse and wagon at New Market, failed to appear in court and his bond of $300 furnished by Nelson Giles, was forfeited.

Andrew Cozzi, of this city, who recently pleaded guilty to selling indecent postal cards, failed to put in an appearance, but his counsel, Robert McAdams explained that Cozzi did not understand the date for appearance. Sentence was postponed for one week.

Barnard Engleman, of Elizabeth, who was convicted of burglary on Monday, was arraigned on two other charges, one of which was a charge of carrying a concealed weapon. He was sentenced to seven years in State prison.

Arnold Stahl, of Elizabeth, found guilty of selling indecent postal cards, was fined $250, and Joseph Pagnillo, of Summit, found guilty of pointing a revolver and discharging the same at Policeman Kelly was sent to State prison for one year.

M. E. WOMEN'S WORK FOR CAUSE OF MISSIONS

The annual meeting of the Elizabeth District of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church took place in the Epworth church in Elizabeth this morning. Mrs. S. M. Winter, of this city, first vice president, presided for Mrs. A. C. McCrea, of this city, the president. On the arrival of Mrs. J. H. Knowles, conference secretary, the chair was turned over to her.

The meeting opened with a devotional service of song, Scripture reading and prayer conducted by the Rev. Enoch Meachem, Ph. D. The district was then welcomed to the church by the pastor, Rev. Staley F. Davis, who said that the gathering was a typical and representative one of Christians who are doing the real work of the Lord. The one not interested in foreign missions, he said, had missed the keynote of the Christian faith. Mr. Davis then told of what Christian missions had contributed to social progress, as cited by Dennis, the theologian.

"Good churches and missions," said Mr. Davis, "go hand in hand. One cannot exist without the other. You are doing pre-eminently the work that has been laid down by Jesus Christ. Every church ought to be open to you, and every Christian church is."

The following committees were appointed:

Nominations—Mrs. J. H. Knowles, Mrs. S. A. Spencer, Mrs. Robert Moore and Mrs. A. C. McCrea.

Registration—Mrs. J. R. Laggren and Miss Claire Griffin.

Resolutions—Mrs. J. B. Hayes and Mrs. Theodore Armstrong.

The treasurer's report showed a cash balance of $1.05 on hand.

MORE LOOT IS IDENTIFIED

Mrs. F. R. Walker, of Stelton, Finds Watches Among Booty at Green's House.

BURGLAR HAS BAD RECORD.

Colored Man Who Robbed Fritts' House Served Term in Reformatory as a Boy—More Valuable Unidentified.

The belief that George Green, the colored driver who robbed George Fritts' house at Mountainside, last week, is no amateur burglar but has a record of several successful robberies in this vicinity, was sustained this morning, when a search of his house on Grove street, conducted by Marshal Lemuel Pope, of the borough police, revealed watches and jewelry belonging to Mrs. F. R. Walker, of Piscataway township, near Stelton.

Mrs. Walker's house was robbed on the night of September 1, when an entrance was effected through a second story window and twenty-five dollars in money, with two silver watches, four ladies' rings, a gold breast pin, two dozen handkerchiefs and a bold dollar bangle were taken. Though reported to the township police, no trace of the missing booty could be found. All the articles except the money were found and identified by Mrs. Walken when found in Brown's house in the borough.

Reading in the paper about the find of two watches in the search at the house last week conducted by the Westfield police, Mrs. Walker thought that perhaps they might belong to her. Louis Walker, Jr., came to this city yesterday afternoon and secured a search warrant from Justice of the Peace Clark Mundy. The search was conducted today, after the watches had been identified, and the other articles were found in the house. Walker said that he knew Green by sight, as he had worked near Stelton several months ago. When he heard of the man's arrest and read of the booty that had been recovered, he believed he had a clue to the burglary. Accompanied by Mrs. Walker, he went to Green's house today with Marshal Lemuel Pope and identified the property recovered in the search.

Investigation of Green's record shows that he served a long term in the State reformatory for a petty larceny committed several years ago. Since leaving the reformatory, he has been "hired out" to several farmers in Piscataway township. He has only been in the employ of Isaac Smalley for a short time, and previous to his arrest was employed as a driver, carting hay. Green is now in a cell in the county jail at Elizabeth, held without bail to await the action of the grand jury. William G. DeMeza, of this city, is Green's counsel.

In addition to the valuables identified by Mrs. Walker this morning, a fountain pen and other trinkets and jewelry were found at Brown's house by Marshal Pope in the search. It is believed that the man has been implicated in other robberies and has concealed the booty in his house, but as yet no other search warrants have been issued and up to noon today none of the rest of the booty had been identified.

DR. RAYMOND'S SUCCESSOR TO GET $10,000 A YEAR.

The Schenectady, N. Y., Union announces that Rev. Dr. George Alexander, Union '66, pastor of the University Place Presbyterian church of New York city, will be the next president of Union College, succeeding Rev. Dr. Andrew V. V. Raymond, formerly pastor of Trinity Reformed church, this city, who resigned last June to accept a Buffalo pastorate. Dr. Alexander was offered the presidency of the college at that time, but consented only to become acting president until some suitable educator would be selected for the place.

Arrangements have been made which will relieve the new president of the responsibility of financing the college. The trustees have also decided to make Dr. Alexander's salary $10,000 a year.

TAX COLLECTOR OBSERVES 5TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Tax Collector and Mrs. William R. Townsend entertained about fifty of their relatives and intimate friends from this city, New York and Brooklyn at their home on Kensington avenue last night on the occasion of their fifth wedding anniversary. It was a "wooden wedding anniversary," and the couple received many presents of furniture, pictures and burnt wood work appropriate to the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Townsend received their guests in the parlor, which was tastefully decorated in pink and green, and during the evening a collation was served in the dining room, where the decorations were red and white. Music for the affair was furnished by Suhr's orchestra.

Mrs. Townsend, formerly Miss May Mulford, is the daughter of the late E. C. Mulford, of East Fifth street. The couple were married five years ago yesterday at the home of Miss Mulford's parents, subsequently beginning housekeeping at 734 Kensington avenue.

On Monday, November 19, Mr. Townsend was appointed tax collector to succeed John W. Murray, resigned. Previous to assuming this office, he had been clerk to the Union County Board for the Equalization of Taxes.

CHURCH SOCIETY WELCOMES NEW MEMBERS AT LUNCHEON

A delightful luncheon, attended by about sixty members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Grace M. E. church, was held yesterday at the church. The affair was of a novel nature, the luncheon being given by a number of the women under the chairmanship of Mrs. Charles Force, to a delegation of members of the society of which Mrs. George Nelson is chairman.

Early in June, the society divided into two parts, and a competition to get new members started. It was agreed that the side who secured the most new members for the society was to be given a luncheon at the church by their less successful opponents in the contest. As a result of the six months' work, forty-nine new members have been added to the society, which now numbers ninety-seven women. Mrs. Nelson's corps of workers secured the majority of the new members, so the other faction furnished the collation. Most of the new members of the society were present and were cordially greeted by the parish workers.

Mrs. E. P. Stevens, as president of the society, made an address of welcome. At the conclusion of the luncheon, which was served at 1 o'clock, a short business meeting of the society was held, at which matters of routine business were attended to and plans for the winter discussed.

BRIGHT CHORUS GIRL SUCCUMBS TO TYPHOID

Word has reached here of the death of Miss Augusta Kelly, aged nineteen years, which occurred at St. Paul, Minn., last Saturday, from typhoid fever. Miss Kelly was born in this city and spent most of her early life here. She was the daughter of Frank Kelly, of Harrison, and during the past few years she has been a member of a theatrical company. At the time she was taken ill she was playing with the company at the Star theatre, St. Paul, and was removed to St. Joseph's Hospital, that city, where she died. She was one of the chorus girls in the production and it is said had met with much success which destined her for a more important part.

Miss Kelly's mother died here on August 7 last and within a week's time her brother died. That was the last time Miss Kelly was in Plainfield. She was then playing in New York State and soon afterward the company went west. The body is now en route for Plainfield and is expected to reach here the latter part of the week. Arrangements for the funeral will then be made.

Governor to Review Regiment.

Governor Stokes will be the guest of honor at a review, regimental drill and parade of the Fourth Regiment to be held in the armory, Jersey City, on Wednesday evening, December 11. The State's Chief Executive will be accompanied by members of his staff, and the officers of the National Guard will also witness the ceremonies. After the ceremonies a reception and collation will be tendered to the Governor and escort by Colonel Joseph H. Brensinger and staff in the board of officers's room.

Councilmen Incensed That Promised New Cars are Not Forthcoming.

IT'LL PROVE A BOOMERANG.

One Member Declares That If Agreement Is Violated, P. S. C. Will Suffer—As to New Rails.

The recent announcement by Superintendent Danforth, of the Public Service Corporation, that no new cars would be sent to Plainfield before spring has greatly incensed the members of the Common Council who say that they voted for the double track application simply because the new cars were promised before January 1. A member of the Common Council is speaking of this matter said:

"The trolley officials, including Col. Hine, who attended the Common Council meeting when permission for the double track was given, distinctly promised that as a part of the consideration new cars of the double-truck type would be placed on all city lines before January 1. This agreement was not made until after Col. Hine reported that the tracks on West Fourth street would be heavy enough for the double-truck cars.

"It was also stated by Col. Hine that the company planned to lay new and heavier rails in West Fourth street next summer and to make other needed repairs to tracks. I for one will never vote to give the company a single concession as long as I am in the Common Council if the company fails to give Plainfield the new cars as agreed. It was permitted to lay its double tracks through Watchung avenue and East Front street, thereby hindering to a considerable extent the brick pavement work and for that privilege we were told that the city should have the improved type of trolley. Now Superintendent Danforth says that the cars will not reach here before spring. I am sure that other members of the council feel the way I do and the company may not find it so easy to secure privileges in the future, or at least next year, while these members remain in the council."

As stated in The Daily Press recently, President H. W. Marshall, of the Board of Trade, intends taking up this question with Mayor Fisk at once with a view to securing the news cars if possible. The members of the board are all agreed that the company should furnish the improved trolley for the city and they do not intend to let the matter drop until the company does as it agreed to when seeking a privilege. President Marshall will undoubtedly have something to say on the subject at the meeting of the board tomorrow night.

S. ST. JOHN M'CUTCHEON TO ADDRESS SCHOOL BOARD.

S. St. John McCutcheon, who is a member of the State Board of Education, will address the semi-annual meeting of the Somerset County School Board Association at Somerville, Saturday, December 14. Mr. McCutcheon has not yet selected his subject, but will speak on some phase of educational work in the public schools.

The meeting will be held at the Somerville court house and Henry C. Krebs, county superintendent of schools, will attend. These sessions are held semi-annually for the purpose of getting together board members from the country districts to discuss educational methods and the transportation problem in suburban districts.

Probation Officers Meet.

The State Probationary and Parole Officers' Association held a meeting in the State House at Trenton yesterday to prepare suggestions for its annual report to the Governor. President Charles H. Edmunds, of Trenton, presided, and Secretary Captain G. Irwin, of Union county, was present, with about fifteen other members. The general work of probation throughout the State was gone over in a general way, and the meeting became a conference.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

A dance and social will be given under the auspices of the Dunellen Athletic Club in the near future. At a recent meeting of the organization a committee, consisting of F. Rinehart, J. H. Logan, Stephen Kennedy, John Campbell, Grover Kratzel and R. J. Fisher, was appointed to arrange for the affair and the date will be decided upon at the next meeting.

The Mission Study Class of the Presbyterian church met at the manse last night. The second of the course of eight weeks' study on the topic "The Uplift of China," was taken up. Lewis T. Churchill was the leader of the meeting, which was not fully attended on account of the storm.

Services appropriate to the missionary anniversary will be held in the Presbyterian church Sunday morning. Rev. W. W. Casselberry, pastor of the church, will preach a special sermon on missions, and the missionary offerings of the past year will be handed in at this time.

The Junior League of the Methodist church will give a fair and bazaar in the church parlors Thursday and Friday evenings of next week.

Miss Henrietta Ehardt, of Englewood, has returned home after a short visit with Miss Frances E. Gardner, of New Market.

Miss Bessie Book, of Newark, has returned home after a visit with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph C. Apgar.

The condition of Charles Wyckoff, who has been seriously ill for the past week, shows great improvement.

'PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

Thomas Walsh, who is taking a course of treatment in one of the Brooklyn hospitals for a nervous trouble, has been spending a week with his family. Mr. Walsh is improving very nicely and hopes for his ultimate recovery are very bright.

Frankie Lee, who has been spending his Thanksgiving vacation with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Lee, has returned to his studies at the Madison Boarding school.

Willie Stanbury has returned to his studies at the Mohecian Military School, West Point, after a vacation of a week, spent at his home.

The Hetfield and Weldon Crusher Company have orders enough ahead to keep the crusher going as long as the weather will permit.

The Christmas committee of the Baptist Sunday-school meet for rehearsal tonight in the church.

ELIZABETH MAN TRIES TO KILL HIS SWEETHEART.

The police of Elizabeth are looking for James McCormack, a young hackman of that city, who Monday night, it is alleged, tried to kill with a shotgun his sweetheart, Annie Kennedy, of 52 Jefferson avenue. It is charged that he chased her through the street and discharged both barrels of the weapon at the fleeing young woman, who escaped being hit.

Miss Kennedy made her way to police headquarters, where she entered a formal charge against McCormack. It is believed he has fled to Newark or New York. He worked lately in the latter city. He is well known in Newark and is the youngest son of William McCormack, Elizabeth's oldest liveryman.

Last week Miss Kennedy appeared in police court and made a charge of assault against McCormack, who, she declared, had slapped her in the face while in front of Proctor's theatre at Elizabeth and caught hold of her by the throat and threatened to kill her. He was arrested and bound over to keep the peace. It is said he was jealous of the attentions which an actor employed in a stock company playing at the theatre was paying to his sweetheart, and took this method of punishing her. The couple have been much in each other's company for about four years.

Miss Kennedy visited police court yesterday morning to see if any trace had been obtained of McCormack, whom she is now determined to prosecute to the full extent of the law.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

GOLF.

Members of the Forest Hill Field Club are looking forward to a team match on Saturday which the committee is pleased to term the "Merry War." Harry Allsopp, the club champion, and Herman J. Egner will be the captains, and the plan is to press into service every available player. Women golfers of the club are eligible and if the weather proves pleasant it is expected that there will be at least fifty players on a side, making one of the largest team matches ever held in this country. A beefsteak dinner will follow the match, and one of the conditions is that the losing side must pay all expenses. At the Forest Park Golf Club the married and single men are to clash in a match on the same day. There will be about twenty on a side.

Following closely upon the elevation of Deal to the championship peerage on the other side comes the announcement that a match has at last been arranged between Arnaud Massy and James Braid, the present and former open champions. They are to meet on December 19 for a substantial purse, privately subscribed up to date. Massy and Braid have never met at match play, but in stroke competitions during the last year the former has had considerably the better of it, beating Braid by eight strokes in thirty-six holes. Massy also won the open championship at Hoylake with 312, Braid taking 318. The former also won the French championship a week later with a score of 298 as against 301 for Braid. Recently Braid won a tournament at Cassiobury Park, beating the Frenchman by two strokes, but this represents Braid's only victory over the open champion in the last year.

Leighton Calkins, secretary of the Metropolitan Golf Association, calls attention to the fact that clubs intending to apply for next season's amateur and open tournaments should send in their applications at once. It will also be helpful if the clubs which have elected new secretaries since April would send in their names and addresses of the new officials. Mr. Calkins also states that more than half the above clubs have failed to send in the names of voting delegates for the annual meeting.

The captains of Oxford and Cambridge universities have agreed to have the next annual team contest decided by matches instead of holes. This change was probably hastened by last season's affair, which resulted in the defeat of Oxford through the woful showing of one of its players. In matches Oxford would have won by a comfortable margin.

FOOTBALL.

Walter Camp said yesterday that the new football rules after a second season's trial have justified themselves, with the exception perhaps of the one created last year, which gives great freedom in the use of the forward pass. Upon this it appears some restriction ought to be placed before next year. Mr. Camp said:

"When the new rules were first introduced two years ago there were many who contended that it was too much to require of any team that they should gain ten yards in three downs, and the prediction was that 'no score' games would put an end to the ten yard rule in short order. The contrary has proved true, and already there are those who would like to see the forward pass more restricted, relying upon it as it was a year ago, or even eliminating it altogether and keeping the onside kick ten yard rule.

"What was needed in the game was primarily to lessen the value of possession of the ball, and this the ten yard rule achieved. With its introduction there went out all the close hammering mass plays, which were good for two or three yards on a down, but no more. The American collegian, whether player or spectator, does not care for a game in which the element of chance is paramount. He likes to see or play a game where hard work counts and a game where definite planning secures a well appreciated result. For this reason he does not care for the unlimited forward pass, which can now be tried without severe penalty on first and second downs.

"Throwing the ball around indiscriminately may be the last resort of a weak or inferior team and as such is unsatisfactory. In other respects like the separation of the line of scrimmage and the improvement in the general conduct and spirit of the play, the rules have fully justified themselves and have rendered the game more popular than ever."

The official board of the First M. E. church will meet tonight after the mid-week prayer service.

Mrs. A. E. Finn will lead the Christian Endeavor Society meeting at the Park Avenue Baptist church Friday night. The subject will be "Lessons from an Old Love Story."

Rev. A. C. McCrea, pastor of the First M. E. church, will give an illustrated lecture on "The Great Southwest," before the Epworth League in Vincent chapel Friday night. A social hour will follow the lecture.

SPENT LAST EIGHT YEARS IN MISERY

Boston Banker Says His Life Has Been Hopeless for that Length of Time.

Carleton H. Hutchinson, a leading banker and broker of Boston, with offices at 8 Congress Street, in that city, has recently come out with a very strong statement.

In the widespread discussion over Cooper's new theory and medicines which has spread over the country so rapidly, Mr. Hutchinson has taken the side of those who say that Cooper's theory is correct and his medicine all that he claims.

Mr. Hutchinson's emphatic statement is as follows: "Anyone afflicted with chronic ill health and a general run-down condition caused by stomach trouble, who does not try this man Cooper's medicine, is very foolish. I say this after a most remarkable experience with the medicine.

"I heard of Cooper's success first when he was in Chicago, as I have a private wire to that city in connection with my business. Later, when he came East, I learned more of him and his theory that stomach trouble causes most ill health. I have had no faith in anything not prescribed by a physician for each particular case after careful diagnosis, but after eight years of constant suffering, during which time I spent over $1,500 with absolutely no relief, I felt that it would at least do no harm to try the medicine which I was hearing so much about.

"During those eight years I have been forced to go without solid food for five and six weeks at a time. I always had a sour stomach, was troubled with formation of gas, and led the usual miserable life of the dyspeptic. I was dull, tired, nervous and gloomy all the time, and was always constipated.

"I have taken Cooper's medicine a comparatively short time. For the past month I have not had the slightest sign of stomach trouble. I can eat anything with no bad effect whatsoever. I have a fine appetite, am gaining flesh very rapidly, am cheerful, full of energy, and my nervousness has disappeared. My bowels are in perfect condition for the first time in eight years.

"I don't hesitate to say that I would no take $50,000 and be back where I was. My relief and thankfulness is beond description."

CUT IN WAGES MADE AT CENTRAL'S SHOPS

A reduction in working time from ten to eight hours, with a corresponding cut in wages, went into force at the Central Railroad shops at Elizabethport yesterday. This is in accordance, it was said at the shops, with a general policy of retrenchment adopted by the railroad.

The Singer Manufacturing Company's big plant reopened yesterday after being closed since Wednesday evening. The Singer Company officials say the closing of the factory was without significance, as they merely took advantage of the fact that Thursday was a holiday to give them an opportunity to overhaul machinery and clean up by closing down the extra days.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

What is considered to be the acme of stage production, both from scenic and dramatic view point, will be the next offering at the New Plainfield theatre tomorrow night. The play to be presented will be "The Shoemaker," with Lew Welch as the star. Few comedians and character actors rave risen to the highest pinnacle of their profession in so short a time as has Mr. Welch. As the exponent of a certain type of Hebrew this young Thespian is acknowledged to be without a rival. In his latest play he is provided with a part that gives him rare opportunities to display his peculiar talent and skill. As Morris Goldberg, a poor, misguided mender and maker of shoes, Mr. Welch is invested with a role that reflects his personality, genius and capabilities as an actor and comedian to a remarkable degree of perfection. It is undoubtedly the crowning achievement of his eminently successful career if the commendation of the critics and an exacting public is any criterion. "The Shoemaker" could easily pass successful muster in any theatre where $2 is charged for the highest seat. In all of the four acts there is not a monotonous period. The action is rife throughout and interest is held from the rise to the fall of the final curtain.

Newest, brightest and best of the world famous Cohan song shows is "The Honeymooners," which comes to the New Plainfield theatre next Saturday afternoon and night direct from an all summer run at the palatial New Amsterdam theatre in New York, where it played to capacity at $2 prices. The original metropolitan production is coming here. New York critics declared that no prettier production of a musical comedy had ever been seen on Broadway and the verdict of the road is that nothing so beautiful has been seen heretofore outside of New York. George M. Cohan likes "The Honeymooners" best himself. He lavished his best upon it and the result is an entertainment packed with novelty, melody and excitement. There is more music and song hits than in any musical comedy you ever saw and as much plot as in a great melodrama. Cohan is a past master in the art of combining melody and action and there isn't a dull second in "The Honeymooners."

George M. Cohan's Song Show, "The Honeymooners," at the New Plainfield Theatre, Saturday, matinee and night, Dec. 7.

—Several complaints have been received by the councilmanic street committee about the condition of Clinton avenue, south of the railroad, and Chairman Ginna has promised to give that thoroughfare immediate attention.

—City Engineer Gavett has arranged with Contractor Meeker to store all the unused brick for the pavement until spring. Those not to be laid at this time will be taken off the streets where they have been placed and put in storage.

Miss Ida Backer, of Whitehouse, has been spending a few days with Plainfield relatives.

Miss Pauline Denton, of Washington avenue, is spending the week with relatives in Brooklyn.

Miss Julia Emery, of Jersey City, who has been spending a few days with friends here, has returned home.

DANGER IN DELAY.

The great danger of kidney troubles is that they get a firm hold before the sufferer recognizes them. Health is gradually undermined. Backache, headache, nervousness, lameness, soreness, lumbago, dropsy, diabetes and Bright's disease follow in merciless succession. Don't neglect your kidneys. Cure the kidneys with the certain and safe remedy, Doan's Kidney Pills, which has cured people right here in Plainfield.

Andrew Mattis, carpenter, of 127 West Fourth street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "I have been troubled for years by dull backache and pain in the back of my head, caused by kidney complaint. I was hurt severely some time ago by falling from a scaffold and the physicians thought my spine was injured. I think that fall injured my kidneys. As nothing else that I tried seemed to help my back or kidneys, I decided to try Doan's Kidney Pills and got a supply at Randolph's pharmacy. I have now taken nearly three boxes, and find that the backache and headaches have disappeared."

Pray, what does C. N. F. want, anyway? Is it the Presidency?

What a slap Swarthmore took at Chicago and Syracuse when it spurned those millions in exchange for personal liberty!

Complaint has been made to the Councilmanic street committee that the pavements on Clinton avenue between Third and Seventh streets are being used as a roadway. Police department please note.

John T. Lenahan, a Pennsylvania Democrat, has risen to sudden fame because of his refusal to exploit his career in the Congressional directory. What a chance some of our Jersey State Senators have missed!

Speaking of rapid transit, what's the matter with the Netherwood line of the P. S. C. On Saturday night it covered the route in less than one hour. Pretty good record for one mile.

It will be worth the while to hear Mayor Smalley's speech at the Board of Trade meeting tomorrow night. North Plainfield's fighting executive will have something to say about municipal affairs that should prove interesting to those who are not in touch with official conditions.

The New York Sun, whose bitter enmity has made as many friends for President Roosevelt as it did for President Cleveland in the days of the great hater, Dana, works itself into a frenzy today because the Chief Magistrate of the Nation has injured the feelings of its friends by advocating an income tax. "To urge it in the conditions that obtain at present," says the Sun, "is to disclose with deplorable certitude the unfitness of Mr. Roosevelt for the position which he occupies."

"If you see it in the Sun, it's so"(?)

Lunch Room at the Y. W. C. A.

The Young Women's Christian Association will begin to serve noon lunches at the association house at 212 East Front street, next Monday. Lunch will be served during the busy weeks before Christmas from 11:30 to 1:30 every week-day, and from 5 to 7 on Saturdays. This is done at the request of many women and girls who are employed during the day. The dining room at the association will be made attractive with small tables—the lunches will be wholesome and served at reasonable prices. At first, the principle articles served will be soup and boullion, sandwitches, bread and butter, tea, coffee and milk. Young women who bring their own lunches can procure a hot dish to have it served on. The association reading-room with a library table filled with magazines and good books, together with the rest-room, will give all who come to lunch a pleasant place to spend the noon hour.

Pleaded Not Guilty to Murder Charge

There was a total of eighty-one indictments presented to Supreme Court Justice Francis J. Swayze by the Union County Grand Jury Monday night. Two of the true bills were for murder. The men against whom the indictments were found, Joseph Forca and Francisco Legano, were arraigned in court. They are charged with fatally stabbing Francesco Foglia, of Elizabeth, on Election eve this year. Both prisoners pleaded not guilty and were remanded to jail for trial, the date of which was fixed by Justice Swayze for December 17.

PRINCE FOR SPEAKER MARTIN FOR LEADER

The gathering of members of the Legislature and other politicians at the State House yesterday was marked by a continuation of the fight which has been on for several weeks over the official makeup of the next House of Assembly. There was no open break of any kind and no vigorous expression of disapproval, but it made known early yesterday morning that South Jersey people are still very much against allowing the up-State politicians to grab everything in sight.

The South Jersey fight is being centralized now against Assemblyman William P. Martin, the Essex county Colby leader, who aspires to be Republican leader on the floor of the House. South Jerseymen feel that this place should be given to Assemblyman Frank Jess, of Camden. It is understood, however, that Governor-elect Fort is in favor of the leadership going to Mr. Martin, partly in return for the valuable work the Colbyites did for the regulars in the last campaign and partly because he recognizes Mr. Martin as a splendid man for the place. This complicates affairs somewhat. It is believed that if Mr. Martin is defeated he will at once become the unofficial spokesman for Governor Fort on the floor and this would lead to unpleasant party disagreements. On this account it may be that the South Jersey men will consent to the naming of Mr. Martin as leader and will then ask for the naming of Upton S. Jeffreys for clerk, in place of Captain James Parker, of Passaic, the slated candidates for the office.

Mr. Jeffreys was assistant clerk for a number of years and is well qualified for the position of chief. Captain James Parker, of Passaic, clerk of the House for ten years previous to the Democratic rule of last winter, would like to be returned to the post, and he is making a fight for the place, but there is decided opposition to him because of the war he has been waging against Assemblyman Prince and his connection with several corporate interests. He fought Prince's nomination and election and then worked against him when he announced himself as a candidate for Speaker.

There is a chance, however, that the slate will be put through as originally planned. This would make Prince Speaker, Martin leader and Parker clerk. The selections will be made at a caucus to be held by the Republican Assemblymen at an early date. The time for the holding of the caucus will be fixed next Tuesday. The call will be issued by Assemblyman Theodore B. Gibbs, of amden, the oldest member of the House, both in years and point of service.

No time has yet been fixed for the holding of the Senate caucus, but it is practically settled that Senator Hillery shall be president, and that the Republican floor leader will be Senator Samuel K. Robbins, of Burlington county.

The Democratic minority leaders will be Assemblyman Mark M. Sullivan, of Hudson county, in the House, and Senator George S. Silzer, of Middlesex county, in the Senate.

Venzio Claims Letter a Joke.

The trial of Michael Venzio, of Elizabeth, indicted in the charge of having sent, on August 1 last, a threatening "Black Hand" letter to Father Nicholas Ferretti, of St. Antonio's church, Elizabeth, demanding $800 under pain of death, was commenced in the Court of Quarter Sessions, Elizabeth, yesterday, and is being continued today. The accused claimed yesterday that the letter was written originally as a joke and was intended for a carpenter in Newark, whose name he could not remember. It developed at the trial that Father Ferretti had written a letter to the prosecutor asking him not to "push" Venzio as he had a wife and five children.

Operated Upon for Peculiar Disease.

Wallace B. Morton, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Morton, of West Front street, was operaed upon at Muhlenberg Hospital last Saturday for a rare and peculiar trouble about the knee joint. It is believed that the knee was injured when Mr. Morton was a boy, and it had always given him more or less trouble. The X-ray was used and disclosed a growth at the joint. The operation was performed by Dr. P. J. Zeglio and was witnessed by several other physicians. It was successfully accomplished and the young man is now doing nicely.

Winter Halts All Street Work.

The snow storm which visited this city yesterday and today has put a stop temporarily on all street work and there is no brick paving or concrete work being done today. Fortunately, the streets are in fairly passable condition and will not interfere with general traffic to any extent. If the snow disappears soon and weather permits the brick pavement will be finished on Watchung avenue and West Front street, but aside from that nothing further will be done until spring.

Evangelist to Speak.

James R. Johnson, of Philadelphia, will speak at the men's meeting to be held at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon. He has recently conducted a series of evangelistic meetings at Elizabeth with great success. Mrs. Arthur B. Price, of Westfield, will sing.

NEWS IN THE SUBURBS.

SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

The Baptist church have decided to follow their last year's program for the Sunday-school entertainment this Christmas, and will hold an old fashioned Christmas party, with a Christmas tree and a Santa Claus.

Elmer Teeple is slowly recovering from an attack of pneumonia, which has confined him to his bed since election day. He received word today that his mother is ill at her daughter's house in Elizabeth.

Mr. and Mrs. Bunting and family, of Piscataway, have decided to make their home for the winter with their daughter, Mrs. Lewis Randolph, of Front street.

There will be candy and games and everything to delight the young people. Committees have been formed and are already at work on the program.

Mrs. Thomas Linaberry has just returned from Brooklyn where she attended her sister's funeral.

Miss Ella Rosa Brewster spent an enjoyable day visiting friends in Plainfield.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Compton and daughter, Miss Mary Compton, of West Front street, expect to sail on Friday, December 13, for the Bahama Islands, where they will spend the winter.

AMUSEMENTS.

"Say, souvenirs to my gentlemen fren's on Monday, December 16—it's my twenty-three hundredth boithday," says Patricia O'Brien, who as vitalized by Rose Stahl in James Forbes' comedy, "The Chorus Lady," will on that date arrive at another landmark of her long career in vaudeville and the legitimate. Miss Stahl returned to the Hudson theatre, New York, for a limited engagement of four weeks beginning Monday, November 25, receiving a veritable ovation of welcome to the city in which she appeared last season for three hundred nights. This is practically the fourth engagement of Miss Stahl in New York as last year she appeared at three theatres, the Savoy, Garrick and the Hackett. Miss Stahl began a road tour last June and has since that time been seen in the larger cities of the middlewest, a tour which has met with probably more success than any attraction on the American stage. On the 16 of this month, which will begin the last week of her New York engagement, Miss Stahl will have appeared as Patricia O'Brien 2,300 times, a record held by no other actor with the exception, perhaps, of Denman Thompson's Joshua Whitcomb and Joseph Jefferson's Rip Van Winkle.

Musically superb all New York today acclaims as one of the best operatic offerings of recent years, Henry W. Savage's production of "Tom Jones," now at the Astor theatre. Every critic in New York was most enthusiastic over the production and such music they declare has not been heard in a New York theatre in years. The book is founded on Fielding's famous novel of the same name and is by Robert Courtneidge and A. M. Thompson. Charles H. Taylor wrote the music and Edward German is the man who wrote himself into lasting fame with the dainty soles, rousing choruses and magnetic gavottes and waltzes. Mr. German takes his hearers back to England when it was in truth "Morrie England," and he gives them folk songs without an end. There is a swing to everything he has written which stamps him indelibly on the minds of American theatregoers as one of the most brilliant musicians we have ever had in this country and then, too, he has written music which has given to Louise Gunning, Van Rennsaeller Wheeler, William Norris, Gertrude Quinlan and others glorious opportunities to make fame for themselves an easy fashion. For two years "Tom Jones" was the attraction at the Appollo theatre, London, and musically it was the sensation of the World's Capitol.

"The Man of the Hour" crowds the Savoy to capacity, while its three touring companies meet with sensational success in various sections of the country. William A. Brady and Joseph R. Grismer showed keen intution of dramatic values when they produced the Broadhurst play. "The Man of the Hour" is the strong, vital drama of the moment. It is as fresh and convincing now as it was a year year ago. The time is far distant when its tenacious hold upon public interest will relax. It is a play of stern moral purpose throbbing with strong emotions and with red blood in its veins. It is essentially human and its characters are real people, not mere theatrical puppets, or dawdling degenerates, uttering feeble platitudes. Its abundant humor is rich and spontaneous. Its young people make love like real day lovers. Its elders are powerfully drawn and graphic characterizations. Evtn its political grafters are the real thing, big strong men and mentally and dominating force. Around its parent stalk of sordid and mercenary intrigue are entwined the tendrils of sweet and appealing affection—the love of suitor and sweetheart, of mother and son. Viewed from any angle "The Man of the Hour" is big, verile and fascinating.

May Robson, America's foremost character actress, is at the Garden theatre in one of the biggest hits of her career in the New American comedy, "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary." Alan Dale says: "May Robson is the quintescence of comedy; she possesses the rare gift of exquisite humor—a gift that is heaven-sent, and it is quite enough for her to be on the stage, without a word to say, for the audience to feel happy and mirthful. She is the Duse of humor, the Bernhardt of fun." In selecting the company L. S. Sire, under whose management Miss Robson is starring, has given her able support and the cast contains the following well-known people: David Proctor, Nora O'Brien, Nine Saville, Grace Parks Fske, Margaret Drew, William Levis, H. M. Crowley, George A. Stevenson, Jack Story and Francis Herblin. The production is produced under the personal direction of E. F. Bostwick under whose skillful hands many novel stage effects will be seen. The production is complete in every detail and the stage settings most elaborate.

David Warfield says that on the night he opened in his new play, "A Grand Army Man," at the Stuyvesant, he felt as if he were going to be married. "I reached the theatre hours before the curtain was to be rung up and started to pace the dressing room as if I were a boy about to speak his first piece. trembled all over, and every once in a while a cold chill ran down my back, and ran so fast that the walls shook. I have had two serious operations in my short but tempestuous career, but never while climbing on an operating table have I experienced the feeling of hopeless blue funk that came over me as I was about to take the plunge that night. Once I had taken it I was all right except for a bit of reflex nervousness, bpt just before I made the high dive—well, the best I can wish is that you never feel as I felt then. Believe me, my boy, is was awful, terrible, horrible."

In presenting "The Auto Race" and "The Four Seasons" at the New York Hippodrome, Wednesday evening, November 27, 1907, Messrs. Shubert and Anderson made their second annual production at the world's greatest playhouse. They have endeavored in every way to surpass all previous records for magnitude, brilliancy and splendor. The central idea of "The Auto Race" is based upon a mechanical novelty which is undoubtedly the sensation of the current theatrical season. Three great racing automobiles come head-on toward the audience at a speed of sixty miles an hour, and are brought abruptly to a stop within two feet of the curtain line. This effect can only be produced in the mammoth stage of the Hippodrome, for no other stage in the world offers the space necessary to permit these machines to attain their full momentum. The stage of the Hippodrome is 120 feet deep, and these three machines come at full speed, directly toward the audience, with three pairs of headlights flashing their brilliant rays across the darkened stage. The mechanical arrangement stops the machines automatically, just when it seems certain they will rush over the footlights and crash down over the affrighted spectators. It is a wonderful achievement, thrilling in the extreme, and makes all previous automobile stage effects look like toys.

THREE MEN AND WOMAN, GUN AND KNIFE VICTIMS.

A fit of jelousy is alleged to have been the cause of a shooting and stabbing affray which took place among a number of Hungarians employes of the New Jersey Zinc Company at Newton, late Saturday night. The fight resulted in the wounding of three men and one woman. None of the injured are likely to die.

The principal participant, whom the Franklin Furnace police have been unable to identify, fled after the trouble. A party was being held in one of the miners' boarding-houses, which wat attended by several men. The festivities did not meet with the approval of the assailant, who was "keeping company" with a girl in the house. He first smashed several windows in the house and then rushed in with a drawn revolver. He opened fire on the inmates, who drew knives and pistols and entered into the engagement. A dozen shots were exchanged at close quarters, most of them going wild, and several knife thursts took effect. The fight lasted for about ten minutes, the jealous suitor finally escaping. It was said that he had been wounded, the extent of the injuries being unascertained.

Dr. Charles M. Dunning, of Franklin, was called early Sunday and attended Alec Kalosy, who suffered from cuts in the breast and both hands; Mrs. Devi Noge, who had a long scalp wound and a bullet in her arm, and Andrew Budnar, who received two deep knife thrusts in the back and who also had been shot in the arm.

Sheriff Judson K. Gunn, of Newton, was notified of the fight early Sunday but after communicating with the authorities in Franklin, left the matter in their hands.

CONSTRUCTING A HUGE AIRSHIP IN BAYONNE.

A huge flying machine is being built at Bayonne and it is expected the machine will be ready for a trial trip about February 1. A company, capitalized at $100,000, has been formed to build the airship, and City Recorder Hyman Lazarus is the president of the company.

The machine is in the shape of a huge bird, with wings twenty feet long projecting from each side. A gasoline engine will give the motive power. The inventor, Professor Upharison, an Austrian count, said yesterday that he is satisfied the machine will be able to fly fully as well against the wind as with the wind. The ship now building will carry three men. The wings are to be used for steering purposes exclusively.

Columbia Lodge, No. 58, Ancient Order United Workmen, will elect officers at its meeting Friday night.

Joseph Brown, of Grant avenue, is confined to his home by a serious illness.

The CASTLE of LIES

BY ARTHUR HENRY VERSEY

(COPYRIGHT, 1906, by D. APPLETON & COMPANY)

CHAPTER XI.

Countess Sarahoff Gives an Invitation.

I stood quite still after Locke had left me, lost in thought.

A life for a life, Helena had said. But is not honor sometimes dearer than life itself? At least the honor of a loved brother.

That I could exert any influence over the mind and actions of a man as famous in affairs as Sir Mortimer Brett was absurd. Even had that been possible Helena would have been the last to intrust his honor in my hands. And yet, as Locke had said, what if I were a pawn in the game of Countess Sarahoff?

Then why not be an intelligent pawn, to be moved if you will, carelessly here and there in the game of intrigue, but to be moved with my eyes open?

"No pawn is too insignificent to be made use of;" those were Locke's words. He had believed that she would attempt to make use of me. Heaven grant it, I thought, with a thrill of hope. We should then see what we should see. Yes; I would look out for Countess Sarahoff. But scarcely in the manner Locke had suggested.

Early in the afternoon a message came from her, as I had felt confident it would. A cousin was with her; they were to leave Lucerne that evening, en route to a little village in the Bernese Alps, where she had taken a chateau for the summer. She would be charmed if I would dine with them in her apartment at the Hotel Nationale. And would I pardon the absurd hour of 6:30? I was to come in my morning clothes, since neither she nor her cousin expected to dress.

I accepted the invitation with alacrity. That meant privacy—a certain intimacy. A cousin was to be there, it was true. But the presence of the cousin was, of course, a sop carelessly thrown at Mrs. Grundy.

The cousin had not arrived when I presented myself that evening. I struggled against a sense of shame. I was accepting her hospitality, and I had come to spy on her. But I reassured myself with the conviction that it was to be a game of tit-for-tat.

The apartment de luxe into which I was ushered was dimly lighted, and the air was heavy with the perfume of flowers. In the center of the room the white damask and silver of a table set for dinner gleamed under the soft light of candles. In some vague way, this room, one of a hundred others in the hotel, had lost something of its stiff formalism. It had charm. Charm! That was the word that best described this mysterious woman. Well, I must steel myself against that charm.

She had been beautiful the evening before; this evening she was radiant. Her eyes burned with a fire that at once disconcerted and excited. She was the incarnation of what one calls the joy of living. Never for an instant was she still. Now it was to glance critically at the admirably set table; now to rearrange the flowers. Presently she moved to the window, and drew back the heavy brocade hanging, looking at me over her shoulder.

"Why does my cousin not come?" she demanded, petulantly. "At 11 tonight we go to Vitznau by the boat. Before the birds awake to-morrow we must be off—up, up, up the mountains to my chateau. It will break my heart if we are delayed."

"Your chateau has great attraction for you," I said, smiling.

She came toward me impulsively, her hands clasped.

"Oh, you would like my chateau, monsieur. It is strong and rugged; and so high that to see its towers through the branches of the pine trees, as you climb the hillside, it seems a dream, a fantasy. And below, very far below, there is the noisy little river that rushes around its base, and an adorable village that crouches close to it for protection. And within, there are great shadowy rooms with gleaming bare floors and tapestries. Oh, yes, and there is my beloved piano. When the thunder rolls terribly over the lonely mountains, and the storm beats against the curtained windows, and the fire of huge logs in the hearth does not reach the somber corners—oh, it is then that I live. I am inspired. In the night the passionate soul of Chopin speaks to me. And in the morning when the sun is shining again, and the little river is gay and turbulent, there are my flowers and my books and my poor. And there is peace. My castle is a Castle of Indolence, and it is a Castle of Happiness."

"That is the castle we are all looking for," I said wistfully.

She moved restlessly to the piano. She struck the opening chords of that prelude of Chopin which is at once a suggestion of a funeral march and a procession in a cathedral. I watched her, fascinated, though I had sworn I would not be fascinated by her.

She stopped abruptly in the midst of a phrase. Her white arms dropped to her lap. She looked over toward me. Then she leaned her elbows on the keys; she nodded to me, half in entreaty, half in command. I stood opposite her, leaning toward her, across the piano.

"But sometimes I am lonely in my chateau," she said in a low voice. "Come with Dr. Starva and myself. Be our guest, Mr. Haddon."

I started. A man! I had not counted on that. I had known this was to be an evening of surprises. I had schooled myself to meet them without wonder. But this invitation, so strangely and so unexpectedly given, completely astonished me. Who was this convenient cousin, this Dr. Starva?

The chance I had expected had come. To accept such an invitation as a matter of course, however, would be too absurd.

"You give invitations to all the world?" I asked ungraciously.

"No, monsieur, only to those who interest me, and who—"

"Are of use to you?" I asked indiscreetly.

She looked at me with cool, level eyes, still playing. "Absolument."

"And in what way do I happen to be of use to you, Madame de Varnier?"

She smiled mysteriously, shaking her head.

"That is a secret."

"I detests secrets," I said irritably.

"But if the secret were a condition?"

"Then I should probably refuse. I do not accept invitations when there are conditions attached to them."

"Then if I say that it is because I like you?"

"I should not believe you."

"Then perhaps I am sorry for you. You are unhappy. I will take you to my chateau to find happiness."

"Come, Madame de Varnier, let us stop fencing. Why did you speak to me last night? Why do you pretend to be interested in me—so interested that you ask me, an utter stranger, to visit your chateau? Do you remember my story of yesterday? Am I to think, do you wish me to think—"

She looked at me intently, very pale. Her lips were trembling, and yet she smiled—a smile mysterious, tragic, pitiful.

"Monsieur, I am not a jeune fille. I am a woman of the world. Fate has called to me. I must follow; I must meet my destiny; sometimes I must walk in the dark places. The world, your world, let it think what it will! Bah, it is not my concern what it thinks of me. Perhaps last night, this morning, I wished you to fall in love with me. Perhaps now I am asking you to give me a little respect, a very little, monsieur. But what does it matter?"

I looked at this strange woman in astonishment. It was a curious plea. Perhaps she had wished to make me fall in love with her! She made the frank confession with a childish naivete. And in the same breath she asked for my respect!

"You speak in riddles," I exclaimed petulantly. "Tell me your purpose."

She looked up at me swiftly, half in defiance.

"Tell me yours."

"My purpose!" I cried. "I have none."

A moment she scanned my face keenly. Apparently she was satisfied that I spoke the truth. But that she should have even a glimmer of a suspicion was startling.

"Look, my friend, I speak no more in riddles, but very frankly. Come to my chateau because there you can do me a service, a great service. Voila, I have told you everything."

"Not quite everything," I replied quietly. "You have not told me, for instance, the nature of the service that you ask of the first stranger you meet."

"When you are my guest I shall tell you," she promised airly.

She plunged into a stormy mazurka to drown my protestations. I watched her, irritated and yet half yielding, as she played with the brilliancy and elan of a virtuoso. Then I walked to the window.

To reach it I passed a pier-glass paneled in the wall. A man's face was dimly reflected there. Though I did not look, I knew that he must be standing behind a door leading into another apartment. He had been listening, of course.

I did not betray my surprise. I stepped out on the balcony, looking down on the street below.

This incident banished my last shred of reluctance. These adventurers spied on me; it was equally fair that I play their game. Yes; I determined to meet them with their own weapons.

The music reached a stormy climax. There was silence. I did not go back into the room. I waited curiously. Would she again insist? If so, I determined to no longer refuse.

The heavy curtains at the window were parted. She stood beside me. Again I noticed the feverish light in her eyes; her bosom rose and fell tumultuously; her color came and went.

"Then you have no liking for an adventure?" she demanded in a spirit of desperate gayety. "Even when that adventure is to be shared with a woman—yes, a beautiful woman?"

"Not when adventures are thrust on me," I replied coldly. Her emotion repelled me.

"Ah, you persist in being ungracious. Then say this adventure brings happiness for yourself."

"I should require proof of that."

She saw that I was not to be won over by coquetry. She became serious, almost anxious. Instinctively I felt that she was about to play her last card. Had she known it, I was already decided. But she was ignorant of that, and risked everything to gain her purpose.

"You have set yourself a task. What if I can help you fulfill it?"

"Again you speak in riddles, madam."

"If I said I were listening last night!"

I frowned on her, furious, but I did not answer.

She felt no shame in making this confession. One hand rested on her hip, with the other she snapped finger and thumb.

"My dear monsieur, you are not attractive when you look like that. Even I have heard the English proverb, 'All is fair in love and in war.'"

"And since this is not love, you wish me to infer that it is war? And you ask the enemy deliberately into the camp?"

"It is neither love nor war. It is a truce. Does that satisfy you?"

"Until you tell me the service I am to do you, it must be an armed truce," I interposed cautiously.

I emphasized the adjective.

"Bien! At Alterhoffen you shall know all. Then it will be for you to decide if we are to be allies."

"Very well," I assented briskly. "I will go to your chateau with you. When do we start?"

Now that I had made my decision she grasped the railing of the balcony, exhausted. Presently I noticed that her lips were moving, and as I looked at her in wonder, I saw her furtively make the sign of the cross. When she spoke again, it was languidly, as with an effort.

"Dr. Starva and myself are to go to-night to Vitznau, a little town on Lake Lucerne, an hour's journey from here. To-morrow morning at the dawn we drive en diligence to Alterhoffen."

"Is it necessary that I go to Vitznau?"

"Yes," she said hesitatingly, averting her eyes. "The last boat leaves Lucerne at 11. Your luggage, can it be ready then?"

I nodded absently.

An immense man stood stiffly at the window awaiting us. His bearing was slovenly, as was his attire. The spectacles and the puffy face, unnaturally pale, suggested the habits of the student. But the eyes, small, crafty, and very bright, instantly corrected my first impression, and left me baffled and vaguely distrustful. It was the man whose reflection I had seen in the pier-glass.

"Ah, my cousin at last! Georges, this is Mr. Haddon, an American. He comes to the chateau at Alterhoffen as our guest."

It was impossible to doubt that he had spied on me with Madame de Varier's consent. But I was certain that he heard of my consent to go to Alterhoffen with positive annoyance. I was not blind to the significant look that passed between them: the eyes of Madame de Varier dilating in triumph and defiance; Dr. Starva equally defiant and sullen.

Evidently there was discord in the camp. Dr. Starva did not welcome the fly that had consented to walk into the web. Well, so much the better. A little discord might prove useful.

"Madam is an admirable host," Dr. Starva said slowly in French. "But if the guest is to be quite happy he must be content to amuse himself as madam wishes."

The words were almost a threat. I looked with repulsion at this pale, flabby, shuffling giant. It would be well to be on my guard against him. He might be dangerous. But half the battle was won in realising that.

Madame de Varnier met his bold sally, insolently careless.

"A diner, messieurs," she cried gayly, and took my arm, leaving the huge Dr. Starva to follow.

NAPOLEONS TAKE TWO GAMES FROM WASHINTONS

Still smarting from a defeat of three straight administered by the Bismarcks, Frank Willett's Napoleon bowling team tackled the Washingtons in the tourney series last night and won two out of three games were all over 800 and one of them was close to 900. None of the scores were exceptionally high, Captain Nash, of the Washingtons, and Willie Mullen, of the Napoleons, being the only rollers to get a double century. George Ortleb started out well but in the last game dropped to the lowest score of the night. "Jim" O'Keefe loomed up with an average of 183.2, much better than his previous work.

The scores:

NAPOLEON.
Conklin	161	174	161
E. Toense	182	133	171
Vanderbilt	166	176	146
Mullin	151	168	218
Willett	168	181	199
Totals	828	832	895
WASHINGTON.
Skinner	150	141	150
R. Toense	123	125	164
O'Keefe	193	179	182
Ortleb	198	172	117
Nash	167	176	205
Totals	831	793	818

The next tourney games will be rolled Thursday night between the Wellingtons and Brian Borus.

BOWLING.

The Park Club five will roll the Jersey City Club on the home alleys Friday night, the first series of three games in the Central Journal Bowling League tournament. As this will be the first match on the local alleys in the tournament it is expected that a large and enthusiastic crowd will be present to cheer the Parks.

H. M. MAXSON TO ADDRESS MOTHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Mothers' Association of Plainfield extends an invitation to the parents of public school pupils and to any others who are interested to meet with its members on Friday afternoon, December 6, at 3:30 o'clock in the library of the city high school. H. M. Maxson, superintendent of schools, will present some of the ways in which the homes may co-operate with the schools in their efforts to provide ideal education for the children. Opportunity will be given to all present to ask questions and present opinions concerning the schools, and it is believed that many will avail themselves of the privilege.

S. of V. Fair a Success.

The Sons of Veterans' fair was continued last night and was attended with much success despite the storm. It was "G. A. R. Night," and a large delegation from Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., was present; also Sons of Veterans from different parts of the State, including Somerville, Elizabeth, Newark and New Brunswick. The booths were well patronized and the dancing enjoyed. The attractions will be varied every night during the balance of the week.

Christmas Sale at All Souls'.

The annual Christmas sale will be held at All Souls' church on Park avenue tomorrow and Friday afternoon and evening. The affair will open at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Friday night a supper will be served from 6:30 to 8:30 o'clock. Admission will be free. The women of the church under whose auspices the sale will be held have spared no pains in arranging details and a great many suitable Christmas gifts will be offered for sale.

No Application for a "Y."

The Public Service Corporation thus far has made no request of the city for permission to install a "Y" at Watchung avenue and Fourth street and it is not believed that it will this year. The company has completed about all the track improvement that will be undertaken in Plainfield until next spring. Just what decision will be made concerning the operation of the Netherwood and Arlington avenue lies has not been announced.

Woman's Missionary Meeting.

Mrs. J. A. Chambliss led the devotional service at the quarterly meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the First Baptist church held yesterday afternoon in the lecture room. Current events well arranged and admirably expressed were given by Mrs. John I. Brokaw. A long letter from Dr. Anna Degenring, of Elizabeth, N. J., stationed at the Hospital, Nellore, India, was an interesting feature of the meeting.

Will Address High School Pupils.

Charles R. Scott, State secretary of the boys' department of the Y. M. C. A., will speak at the city high school tomorrow morning in connection with the regular morning exercises. His topic will be "Manners and Morals of Young Men." At noon tomorrow, Mr. Scott will speak at the Somerset street school to the members of the grammar and high school grades.

Second Annual Minstrel Show.

The second annual ministrels and dance under the auspices of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., will be held at the Casino tonight. All the songs will be new, as will also the jokes, and a clever farce will conclude the ministrel performance. Then will follow the dance. The Juniors have prepared for a large crowd and an enjoyable time.

Annabelle Donnelly.

Annabelle Donnelly, the two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Donnelly, died last night. The funeral services will be held from the residence of the parents, 317 Stebbins place, tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. Burial will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

Two Eagles Initiated.

At a meeting of Freedom Castle, No. 42, Knights of the Golden Eagle, held last night, two candidates were initiated and officers were nominated for the coming year. The annual election of officers will be held in four weeks.

Councilman-elect Getting Acquainted

Councilmen-elect Robert E. Hall and F. E. Mygrant were interested spectators at the meeting of the Common Council Monday night, getting acquainted with details and other matters with which they will have to do next year.

INDIAN RELICS SHOWN AT BOROUGH HIGH SCHOOL

A collection of Indian relics, collected in this vicinity by Richard MacDonald, janitor of the Somerset street school, has been put on exhibition in two cases in the school library. The relics include a fine collection of arrow-heads of flint, quartz and jasper, tomahawks, stone axes and grinding stones from the Indian hand mills.

Mr. MacDonald found many of these remains of Indian habitation in the borough, on Watchung avenue and Mountain avenue. One remarkably symmetrical stone, evidently used in an Indian stone weapon, was found among the earth excavated for the construction of the new Manning flats. One case is devoted to the display of stone tomahawks and war axes which were found in the vicinity of Dunellen. Many of the arrow-heads were found in the country back of Short Hills, where they are continually being turned up by the farmers in plowing. The collection comprises the finds of several years.

ELIZABETHTOWN WATER COMPANY'S EXTENSIONS.

John W. Whelan, of the Elizabethtown Water Company, appeared before the Potable Water Commissioners in their rooms adjoining the Governor's room in the State House at Trenton yesterday, with a statement of the system extensions proposed by the Elizabethtown Company. The commission will visit Trenton in a short time and will then make a thorough investigation of the lines of all the extensions referred to.

Attacked on His Way from School.

Matthew Ward, aged 12 years, of Clinton avenue, while returning home from school yesterday afternoon about 3 o'clock, was attacked by two Jewish boys and received several bad cuts under the left eye. Young Ward says that he was walking along West Fourth street when he met the two boys. He claims that he said nothing to them, when without any cause they jumped on him and inflicted the cuts on his face. They then made their escape. The injured lad does not know the names of his assailants, although he says that he has frequently seen them about the West End. The cuts on the boy's face are dangerously near the eye, and it is remarkable that the eye was not injured.

Skillman Jury Still Out.

The jury which is to decide the fate of William H. Skillman, who is on trial for forgery at the county court, Somerville, was still out at 1:30 today. The jury are locked up in the chapel of the First Reformed church at Somerville and have been out since 3:30 yesterday afternoon. There is little possibility of an agreement, in which case a new trial will be necessary. Congressman Alvah H. Clark, who represents Skillman in the case, dwelt at length upon the value of the testimony of Miss Jennie Opdyke in his summary of the case yesterday afternoon. This is the ninth day of the Skillman hearing.

Dr. Bostwick's Story.

Dr. Frank C. Bostwick, official dentist to the Sultan of Morocco, has been spending his vacation in Plainfield, N. J., and at a recent dinner he said, opropos of a bad child:

"It is wise to punish children, but not corporally."

"I know a dentist in Gibraltar who got out a birch rod to punish his little son with one day.

"The boy, looking at the rod, said, piteously:

"'Papa, would mind giving me gas first?'"—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Dr. Parsons Improving.

The condition of Rev. Charles W. Parsons, pastor of Grace M. E. church, who was recently operated upon in New York for facial neuralgia, shows consistent improvement, and he is resting more comfortably today than any time since the operation.

Social Tomorrow Evening.

The Home Department of Trinity Reformed church Sunday-school will give a sociable in the lecture room of the church tomorrow evening.

Sesame Club Meeting.

The Sesame Club will meet tomorrow morning at the residence of Mrs. J. Hervey Doane, 425 East Seventh street.

MAIL COLLECTOR'S RIG COLLIDES WITH AUTO

While Mail Collector Charles Glaentzer was taking letters from a box on Park avenue near Fourth street at 5:30 last night, the horse attached to his cart became frightened and ran away. It went down Park avenue at a pace that defied capture and swung into Front street with a terrific bang, pulling the rig over the high car track and onto the newly laid brick not yet cemented.

Just beyond Somerset street, the horse swung into the excavated portion of the roadway and kept in it for many blocks, the wagon leaping in the air and banging about at every step. Several vehicles and a trolley car were passed in safety but at Plainfield avenue the runaway crashed into Dr. Endicott's automobile.

Glaentzer's horse was thrown down and the mail cart was badly wrecked. The mud guards and a lamp of the machine on one side were smashed and several other parts were bent and scratched. The horse was slightly injured.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

The women's home and foreign missionary societies of the First M. E. church held an all-day missionary meeting in Vincent chapel, yesterday. The foreign society met in the morning. Luncheon was served at 1 o'clock, and the home society met in the afternoon.

Miss Anna Lucretia Case, soprano, will give a song recital at the First Presbyterian church Friday night. She will be assisted by Udo Goeweller, 'cellist, and Mme. Renard, pianist. Admission will be by card of invitation. The program will comprise chiefly grand opera selections.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. Henry Philpott, of Inwood, L. I., is visiting her sister-in-law, Mrs. D. R. Conover, of Duer street.

Miss Gertrude Conover, of Duer street, a student at Barnard College, has returned after spending the Thanksgiving vacation at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry W. Rush, of this city, have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Rush, the parents of Mr. and Mrs. Rush, at Glen Gardner.

CLOSED PORTALS.

Thus far the lack of interest in the organization formed by the past councilors from the local Jr. O. U. A. M., councils has made it impossible to do very much. Several calls have been issued for a meeting but there has always been a lack of a quorum. Another effort will be made to get the members together and if this fails other steps will be taken.

SKY TELLS THEM MUCH.

Heavens Like an Open Book to Men Who Follow the Sea.

There is probably no class that can tell more as to what the weather will be from a glance at the sky than seafarers. This is the natural result of their constant observance of the heavens for the lack of something else to look at when at sea. Thus the sky becomes to the mariner an open book, which he reads by instinct as does a child the face of its parent. A navigator will tell you that a rosy sunset presages fine weather; a sickly looking, greenish hue, wind and rain; a red sky in the morning, bad weather or much wind, perhaps rain; a gray sky in the morning, fine weather; a high dawn, wind; a low dawn, fair weather. Remarkable clearness of atmosphere near the horizon, distant objects, such as hills, usually visible or raised by refraction and what is called a good "hearing day," may be mentioned among signs of wet, if not wind. A landsman is much more ignorant of the signs of the sky, as he has so many other things to distract his attention that he seldom takes much notice of its different phases, which foreshadow so clearly what may be expected in the way of weather.

INDUSTRIAL ITEMS.

The average weekly wage paid to female laborers of all classes in Germany is a little over $1.50 each.

Scottish bakers in 1888 only earned from 20 to 28 shillings a week. The average wages now stand at from 28 to 36 shillings a week.

Bangor, Me., is said to have the only moccasin sewers' union in the country. These workers make the various patterns of woodmen's and hunters' moccasins, "shoe pacs," high and low cut, and other patterns for utility; also many fancy models of soft leathers for indoor use.

The agricultural college at Tokyo has been experimenting for some time past with "sasa," or bamboo grass, and the possibilities of making paper pulp from it. It is now reported that unexpected success has been met with, which is very important for Japan, considering the great abundance all over the empire of this bamboo grass.

Public Library Business.

Only routine business was transacted at the December meeting of the Board of Directors of the Plainfield Public Library, last night. The members present included Vice President Alexander Gilbert, Treasurer J Herbert Case and Dr. Leonard Waldo, William F. Merrill, C. B. Tyler and Secretary William M. Stillman.

FRELINGHUYSEN REVIEWS PURE FOOD LEGISLATION

Somerset's Senator, Father of State's Health Safe-guarding Measure, Tells What Has Been Accomplished.

HOW CITIZENS ARE PROTECTED.

Pledges His Hearty Co-operation in Consumers' League's Effort and Urges Others to Do Likewise.

So instructive was the address made by State Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen before the Cranford Food Committee of the Consumers' League, at Cranford, that through the courtesy of the father of the New Jersey pure food law, his remarks are published in full. The Senator tells what has been accomplished in the State and in the Nation in the cause of pure food legislation. In addition, he summarizes plans for the future, pledging his hearty support for all measures along that line.

Senator Frelinghuysen's address follows:

"I have come at the invitation of Miss Lakey, who has done so much to inspire the carrying on of this noble work for the benefit of humanity, and for pure food legislation and sanitary improvement in this State as well as in the Nation. I am only an apprentice. I am here tonight to learn. I want to be taught by these experts who have made this their life study. In my capacity as Senator in the Legislature, I am simply an agent to support good legislation, and help enact laws that will ensure to the welfare of the people. While not a scientist or a specialist, I am deeply interested in the work of the Consumers' League, and its practicability. Believing, as I do, that much benefit is to be derived by the great population of New Jersey from pure food legislation, I stand ready to assist this league in every way that I can as long as I represent the people at Trenton.

"There are some unthinking people who lightly regard and treat indifferently the work of this league. Such persons are not good citizens. This mission comes pretty close to everyone when we think of the loved ones in our own homes, those helpless little ones placed in our care, and over whom we have guardianship. Its importance was brought home to me quite closely when last summer my little family left the city, and the certified milk we procured there, and came to the country. To supply the little one with pure milk was the problem. The first thing I had to do was to have the two cows supplying milk to the family tested for tuberculosis, and the milk analyzed by a chemist. This taught me quite a lesson. A physician told me recently of a prominent citizen of this State who lost a child, and the malady was traced directly to milk from a cow with tuberculosis. In the face of this, who will dare to say the work of these noble women is a fad, or that their ideas are extreme, or their enthusiasm hysterica..

Health Law Revision.

"New Jersey has always tried to enact legislation for the welfare of its citizens, and has never stopped to count the cost in safe-guarding the health of her people. There are laws on the subject of pure milk and tuberculosis cattle, but they do not as yet go far enough. It is the duty of the present Legislature to further improve the laws so that the health of the people will be protected. In view of the recent unfortunate deaths from typhoid at the State Hospital for the Insane at Trenton, it should alarm those who have the welfare of the State at heart and arouse all citizens to their duty in urging the Legislature to stop these unfortunate deaths, and have them revise and improve the health protecting laws of the State. While this recent epidemic was due to the polution of a spring, owing to faulty drainage, with proper attention, the cause should have been detected before the results became so disastrous, New Jersey has been very particular, and has proceeded along the lines of research and learning, keeping abreast, in fact, ahead, of the times in profiting by the lessons that experience has taught the human race. Her institutions for the care of her unfortunate and indigent sick show her good intentions and motives. She has enacted laws to protect her citizens against tuberculosis in cattle, providing a method of inspection by the State of diseased cattle and the reimbursement from the State treasury to the unfortunate farmer whose live stock may be destroyed by the edict of the State. This is done in order that she might meet with less opposition in carrying out these regulations.

State's Noble Work.

"To prevent the spread of tuberculosis among our people, she has established a sanitarium for the disease in the high altitude among the hills of Hunterdon county, at Glen Gardner, N. J., where those afflicted, who are believed curable, are taught to care for themselves, so that they may return to their vocations with a renewal of hope which is so necessary in this disease.

"I might also speak of that splendid charity, the Epileptic Farm, where those stricken with this disease, spend their time at a beautiful location in the open air—managed successfully by a competent board of managers—inmates housed at night in comforable buildings, well lighted, heated and sanitary. It must be borne in mind that New Jersey maintains these institutions at her own expense, there being practically no charitable institutions in the State supported from private fortunes and subscriptions.

"I might speak of the great work of the Sewerage Commission having jurisdiction over the streams, lakes and seashore. Their supervision over the potable waters, of their persistent fight against polution of the streams, and how they have incurred the displeasure of municipality after municipality because they are prohibiting them from discharging their sewerage in the water used by the people for drinking purposes, compelling the municipalities to build trunk sewers or disposal beds.

The Milk Supply.

"When we consider the ice production of the State, and its immense industry of oysters and fish, we see in this work what a close relation it bears to the pure food crusade.

"We know that New Jersey is a great dairy State. Even now the great freight trains are carrying the milk supplies from the dairies and farms to the large cities of this and the neighboring States of New York and Pennsylvania. In this connection I might speak of the work of Dr. Henry Mitchell. How by their resistless fight for a certain standard of milk, they compelled the creameries to clean up, how they have prohibited habitations within or near creameries, how they fixed a standard for milk and clean vessels, how through the persistent prosecution, but not persecution, of the attorney general's office, they have done so much to enforce the milk laws.

"Although not bearing directly on my subject I have tried to present these facts to you to show the attitude of the State toward her peoples health and her constant efforts to improve her sanitary conditions.

Pure Food Legislation.

"I will speak but briefly and in general, inasmuch as you are familiar with the topic in its minutest detail. When the Federal Government enacted the pure food act after the gallant fight made by the Consumers' League in conjunction with the noble men in the Congress, when they successfully combatted the wealthy and unscrupulous lobby of quack patent medicine men, they performed an act for the benefit of the human race, the effect of which is widespread. When we consider the alarming death rate among the children in our larger cities, the increase of alcoholism among the granger population of the West from the effect of the deadly spirits in patent medicines, and the appetite created for poisonous drugs in powders and other cheap concoctions, we realize it was high time that some check through vigorous laws should be placed on certain manufacturers to prevent the eating out of the vitals of the American race.

"While the federal act protected the people of each State against drugs and food stuffs brough in under interstate commerce, and one by one various States enacted pure food laws restricting the manufacturers, New Jersey was manufacturing about 10 per cent. of food and drug stuffs within her own State unregulated by any law.

Tells of His Work

"At a conference with the State Medical Board in the summer of 1906, I agreed to father a pure food act in this State. At the previous session an attempt had been made to pass such a law, but owing to the opposition of certain patent medicine lobbyists, it had failed of passage. Therefore, in conjunction with the State Board of Health, and the State Medical Board Senate No. 168 was framed and introduced by me in the early session of this year. This measure was a pure food and drug bill, dealing also with the sale of milk and vinegar tending to conserve.

"The question of the purity of these fluids which reached the public, thereby going a little further than the federal act, the course of the bill was not, nor could it expect to be, smooth. Many hearings were had, attended by varied and diversant in-

LOWER LIGHTING RATES

New Contract With P.S C.will Bring a Fifty Cent Reduction on Each Incandescent.

ARC LIGHTS ALSO CHEAPER.

Some of the Larger Kind Will Be Placed in the Business Section in Consequence.

While the provisions of the proposed new electric light contract with the Public Service Corporation which will be presented to the Common Council this month are not definitely announced, it is said that the company has offered to fix a maximum charge of $15 per year on each incandescent street light, as against $15.50, the present price per lamp. It is also said that a more attractive price will be offered for the use of arc lights and that the special committee will suggest that a certain number of them be placed in the business section of the city.

While the company made deductions on the year's bill, which was paid by the city Monday night, it is said that still further deductions will be made for December. With the assistance of F. A. C. Perrine, of New York, the well-known electrical expert, the special committee from the Council has been busily engaged in drafting a new contract which will, it is believed, meet with the approval of that body when presented. It is further reported that the company's officials have done all in their power to facilitate the work of the committee and secure a contract that will be equally fair to the city and company.

Representatives of the Plainfield Protective Association, including President Depew, made a tour of inspection of the city looking for bad lights and Chairman Montgomery of the councilman light committee was informed that out of 904 street lights only three were found to be in poor condition, one of these was at Fourth street and Watchung avenue and had the appearance of having burned out. Mr. Montgomery is naturally much pleased over the encouraging report.

P.H.S. SCHOOLBOYS TO FORM MILITARY COMPANY

Within a few days competitive examinations will be held by the boys of the city high school for offices in the military company to be formed there this winter. About sixty of the pupils of the school have signified their desire to renew the military organization of the school, which permanently disbanded in 1904. Commandant James D. Macnab, of the school faculty, will be in charge of the company, which will be formed as soon as the officers are chosen.

It was the idea of the commandant to form a battalion of two or three companies, but only about sixty members of the school signed the paper posted in the school calling for candidates for the organization, so the battalion plan has been abandoned and there will be but a single company. The officers to be chosen are a captain and two lieutenants, of the commissioned officers; four sergeants, six corporals, a buglar, color bearer and drummer, with a company adjptant. Drill manuals have been issued to the boys of the three upper classes of the school, who are eligible for offices in the company. No date has been set for the examinations, but they will probably be held at the school next week.

Drills will be held weekly, outdoors as long as the weather will permit, and later in Company K's armory, if arrangements can be completed. The school has a handsome standard of colors, presented to the battalion by Lieutenant Horne, of West Seventh street, about five years ago.

Abram W. Suydam.

Abram W. Suydam, 63 years old, died yesterday at his home on High street, Somerville, after a long illness. He moved there about seven years ago from Clover Hill, where he was postmaster for a long time, and conducted a general store. A widow survives him. The funeral will be held at his late residence tomorrow.

Fair for the Children's Home.

For the benefit of the Children's Home, a fair will be held at the home of the Misses Arnold, 817 Third place, Saturday afternoon, December 14, from 2 to 6 o'clock. Extensive arrangements are being made for a successful event and liberal patronage is hoped for. There will be many attractions for young and old.

NEW CARS BY JAN 1, MAYOR IS CONFIDENT

Despite the assertion of Superintendent Danforth, of the P. S. C., that the promised new trolley cars will not be put in service until spring, it is learned that the agreement made with Col. Hine, of the same concern, will be kept and the much needed cars will be running on the Fourth street line on New Year's day as agreed upon three weeks ago. Mayor Fisk, himself, is authority for this statement.

When asked today what steps would be taken by the city should the P. S. C. violate its agreement made at the time it was given the privilege of double-tracking its line on Front street and Watchung avenue, Mayor Fisk declared that no such contingency would arise.

"Col. Hine," said the mayor, "promised the new cars on the West Fourth street line by January 1. You can rely on his word. I have had no conversation with any other P. S. C. official about the matter, but I feel confident that what Col. Hine has told me will come true. The cars will be here by the time appointed."

BIG TIME PROMISED AT THE BOARD OF TRADE

Mayor Newton B. Smalley, of the borough, will address the Board of Trade at the regular meeting to be held at the board rooms in the Coward building tonight. "Municipal Conditions in Plainfield and North Plainfield" will be his topic, and from an impartial standpoint he will speak at length on condition which exist in the city and borough government and will state remedies for certain defects which have come to his notice.

In connection with the Mayor's address, there will be a smoker in the board rooms after the regular business meeting, and minstrel entertainment will be provided. Refreshments will be served, according to the plan announced at the last meeting of the Board, when a committee was appointed to rouse interest in the work of the board by developing the social side of the meetings.

C. R. SCOTT TALKS TO LOCAL SCHOOLS' PUPILS

Talking to the pupils of the city and borough high schools today in a plain straight-forward manner, Charles R. Scott, State secretary of the boys' department of the Y. M. C. A., spoke on right living, dwelling on the point that the habits formed in school stand by the individuals through life. Mr. Scott took for his topic "Manners and Morals of Young Men" in his talk before the pupils of the city high school at the opening exercises of the school this morning. He said good manners counted for much in the business world as in the social world, and that "cleanliness is next to godliness."

Mr. Scott spoke at the Somerset street school this noon. His subject was "Clean Hands, Clean Speech, and Clean Sport." The address was along the same lines as his talk to the city high school pupils, and he emphasized the statement that just as a man is known by the company he keeps, so is he sized up according to his language and his personal appearance and his habits, not only in society but in the various branches of sport in which he may participate.

This Thief Stole Beef.

George Rose, who lives on Manning avenue, reported the theft of a forty pound quarter of beef from a shed at his house to Borough Marshal Lemuel Pope yesterday. Rose had purchased the meat and hung it in his shed for storage, but somebody pinched it Tuesday night. Rose has suspicions of the thief and will probably get out a search warrant.

To Tell About the Bungalow Boys.

William Jefferys, father of the "Bungalow Boys," of Berkeley Heights, will speak before the Pleiades Club, of New York city, at a club banquet to be held at the Hotel Brevoort, Sunday night. Among the invited guests is Sig. Bonci, the operatic singer. Mr. Jefferys has been asked to talk about the bungalow system to the club members.

Reception to Football Team.

A reception and danc to the members of the city high school football eleven will be held in the high school auditorium Saturday night. Speeches will be in order from the various members of the team during the "supper dance" on this occasion.

HALLOCK MAKES A CHANGE

Exchange Member of Baring & Co., Which Disolves, Joins Another Banking House.

TO KIDDER, PEABODY & CO.

Boston Firm to Open a New York House Succeeding London Bankers Who Withdraw.

The banking house of Baring & Co., New York representatives of Baring Bros. & Co., Limited, of London, will be dissolved on January 1, and George D. Hallock, of North Plainfield, its senior member, will become identified with another equally large banking house, which takes over its business. The business, however, will be conducted much as before by Kidder, Peabody & Co. of Boston, who have been Boston agents of the Barings and for whom the Barings New York house has acted as New York agent. Kidder, Peabody & Co. will open a New York house on the date of the dissolution of Baring & Co.

Of the three members of the firm of Baring & Co. Hugo Baring will return to England, where he will be connected with Baring Bros. & Co., and George D. Hallock, the exchange member, and A. L. Mason will become members of the New York house of Kidder, Peabody & Co. Associated with the two latter in that house will be W. L. Benedict, who has been in charge of the Boston office of Kidder, Peabody & Co., for many years. The New York office of the Boston firm will be at 56 Wall street. Most of the clerks in the employ of Baring & Co. will be retained by Kidder, Peabody & Co.

At the office of Baring & Co. in New York yesterday it was said that the step had been in contemplation for many months. Kidder, Peabody & Co. were anxious to open a New York house, and it was realized that the New York business of Baring Bros. & Co., of London, could be transacted quite as well through Kidder, Peabody & Co. This, it was said, was the only reason for the change. It is expected that the New York house of Kidder, Peabody & Co. will have charge of much important financiering of the same character as that which has been transacted by the Boston house. The firm acts as fiscal agents for many important corporations.

DENIES STORY INVOLVING SOME FEDERAL OFFICERS

General Grenville Dodge, who was recently elected commander-in-chief of the Military Order Loyal Legion of the United States, made his first appearance since the election at the quarterly meeting and banquet of the New York Commandery of that order at Delmonico's, New York, last night. In an informal talk given by him after the banquet, Gen. Dodge stated upon the authority of the editor of "The Confederate Veteran," which paper published the first articles on the subject, that the statement to the effect that Generals Grant and Thomas and Admiral Farragut offered their services to the Confederacy during the Civill War and attempted to secure commissions in the southern army, was without foundation.

Gen. Dodge recently attended the thirty-seventh annual reunion of the Army of the Tennessee at Vicksburg, and while there met the editor of "The Confederate Veteran," and was told by him that the article in question got into the paper without his sanction or complete knowledge. He afterward investigated the statements and informed Gen. Dodge that they were found to be untrue and an article to that effect was published in the southern paper. Gen. Dodge spoke in the highest terms of the hospitality accorded the Union veterans upon their visit to Vicksburg and he felt sure that sectional feeling was rapidly passing away.

The Plainfield members who attended last night's meeting included Rev. Dr. W. S. Hubbell, Dr. Frank S. Wells, Major W. D. W. Miller, Captain M. C. Dobbins, DeWitt C. Hubbell and Walter C. Dobbins. Newark, Elizabeth, Montclair and the Oranges were also represented.

Members of the boys' department of the Y. M. C. A. were photographed in the gymnasium Saturday by Stone and the pictures have been finished up. About fifty boys are in the picture, with Physical Director George L. Listman and Boys' Secretary L. A. Soule.

POLICE FIND RANDOLPH A PROFESSIONAL CROOK

Not to be outdone by the North Plainfield police, who captured a "Jekyll-Hyde" negro crook, the city bluecoats find they have a professional burglar in Edward Randolph, the colored man who was arrested Tuesday night for stealing a case of silverware from Miss Lizzie Brighton, of Arlington avenue.

A search of the prisoner's effects at Police headquarters, yesterday, brought to light several pawn tickets for articles of jewelry disposed of in Brooklyn. Randolph admitted that they had been put in by him but he refused to state where he obtained them. His statements later showed without doubt that he has been living in various places about this part of the State and that he has evidently been committing robberies at regular intervals. He was committed to the county jail this morning and while he is awaiting the action of the Grand Jury Detective-Sergeant Flynn will ferret out the extent of his operations.

The police picked up another colored man, last night, on suspicion that he had been an accomplice of Randolph at various times and in the belief that further information might be secured from him. He withstood the "third degree" and was afterward released.

TRUANCY OFFICER CONTINUES ON THE JOB

Miss Adelaide Ball, the truancy officer, again appeared in the city court as complainant today, charging Mrs Marie Cigliaro, of Cottage place, with keeping her ten-year-old daughter away from her studies. Through an interpreter the mother explained to the court that she only had the child remain at home when she herself was sick and had to have someone to help her. She was told that the girl must be sent to school or it would cost her $5 in the form of a fine. Mrs. Cigliaro nodded assent but she immediately commenced talking to the interpreter with earnest gestures.

"Your Honor, Mr. Judge," the latter explained, "She says that her little Rosie will be at the school except for the cold days."

'Other women's children are at the school both cold and warm days and you tell Mrs. Cigliaro that we make no allowance for the weather," was Judge Runyon's remark in closing the case.

Patrick Reed, the colored man who was in court last week on a charge of keeping his daughter, Queen Victoria Reed, home from school, was again complained of by Miss Ball yesterday. He was notified to appear in court today but failed to do so. A warrant was made out and the police will apprehend him.

EXCERPTS FROM "THE CREATION," BY CHOIR.

Excerpts from Haydn's "Creation" will comprise a special musical service to be given at the First M. E. church, Sunday night, by the choir under the direction of J. Edmund Skiff, organist and choirmaster. This program will be given in connection with a talk on the life of Haydn by the pastor, Rev. A. C. McCrea:

Representation of chaos, organ recitative, "In the Beginning God Created;" "And the Spirit of God," chorus; recitative, "And God Saw Light," air—"Now Vanish Before the Holy Beams;" "Despairing, Cursing Rage," chorus; air—"The Marvelous Work;" "And to the Ethereal Vaults," chorus; recitative, "And God Said, Let There Be Light;" recitative, "In Splendor Bright;" "The Heavens Are Telling," chorus; "Achieved Is the Glorious Work," chorus.

Drove On New Pavement; Arrested.

Eugene Hill, a colored coachman, was arraigned in the city court this morning, charged by Patrolman Charles Flynn with driving over the newly cemented brick pavement on East Front street after he had been warned not to. Through Lawyer Arthur Murphy, his employer, he pleaded a misunderstanding of the policeman's orders and sentence was suspended. Hill was also accused of insolence to the officer but he denied it.

Michael Venzio Found Guilty.

Michael Venzio, the Elizabeth Italian on trial in the Union County Court charged with sending a "Black Hand" letter to Father Ferretti, a Catholic priest of that city, was found guilty, the jury returning a verdict, with recommendations for mercy, at 10:15 o'clock last night.

Funeral of Mrs. Dora Hall.

The funeral of Mrs. Dora Hall, 34 years old, wife of J. D. Hall, of Somerville, was held Tuesday in the Reformed church at Three Bridges. She died from consumption, after a long illness.

WEALTH OF HORSE FLESH

Blue Ribbon Animals in a Single Local Stable Worth Over $150,000.

JUDGE MOORE'S ARE THERE.

Probable That Value of Animals to Be Quartered at James Gethin's Will Reach $200,000.

The arrival of thirteen proudly-prancing blue ribbon show horses from Judge W. H. Moore's stable at James Gethin's establishment at the Riding and Driving Club grounds today, brings the total value of equines now under Mr. Gethin's care up to the grand total of $150,000. Others are expected within a few days so that there is a possibility of $200,000 worth of animals being cared for at the stables this winter. At no time has such a string of prize winners been in the city except during the regular show weeks.

The horses brought in today are the best of Judge Moore's big string and come direct from Madison Square Garden where they captured thousands of dollars in prize money. They were shipped out from Jersey City in a special Arms Palace car and each one in charge of an attendant. Special grooms will aid Mr. Gethin's men 'n seeing that they receive the care that a horse of high degree demands.

Beside the Moore horses, Mr. Gethin has in his charge the string from the stables of Paul A. Sorg and Peter Hauck, Jr., all of which make the circuit of the big shows. With the addition of his own animals, comprising hunters, jumpers and saddle animals, a stroll through the commodious quarters at the club grounds is akin to a visit at the "horse fair."

It is customary for the owners of show horses to board them during the winter months in places where extreme care and safety are provided. An acquaintance with Mr. Gethin and the establishment he has at the club grounds led Messrs. Moore, Hauck and Sorg to select it for the present season for the placing of their strings. The proprietor takes extreme pleasure in looking after his charges and from his years of experience in the business is enabled to present the horses in the spring in the pink of condition.

CLASSICAL PROGRAM ARRANGED BY SOME WELL KNOWN ARTISTS

A song recital will be given at the First Presbyterian church tomorrow night at 8:20, by Miss Anna Lucretia Case, soprano; assisted by Udo C. Gossweiler, 'cellist, and Mme. Ohrstrom-Renard. Admission will be by card of invitation. The recital will be given under the direction of Clifford A. Braider, organist of the church, and this program will be given:

"Aria" (from "Carmen"), Bozet; "Sur le lac," Goddard; "The Lamp of Love" and "Primavera," Salter; "Spring," Henschel; "Le Cygene," Saint Saens; "Scherzo," Van Goens; "Aria" (from "Pagliacci"), Leoncavallo; "Hungarian Rhapsodie," Popper; "The Danza," Chaminade; "Songs My Mother Taught Me," Dvorak; "Summer," Chaminade.

Prominent Shriner Drops Dead.

Elisha B. Vliet, for many years oriental guard of Salaam Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Newark, dropped dead in the street in Newark today. Harry W. Marshall, potentate of the local order, was informed of the death of Recorder George Ward, recorder of Salaam Temple, by telegraph. Mr. Vliet, who is well-known to many Plainfielders, was a charter member of the Shriners in Newark, and only last night officiated in his office at a meeting of the Newark lodge.

Helplessly Drunk in the Borough.

"All in, down, and out," was the report made on the North Plainfield police blotter by Marshal Keller referring to Edward Yansal, a Norwegian, whom he found helplessly drunk on Somerset street late last night. The fellow lives in Netherwood, but had too much booze in him to navigate home, so Keller arrested him to keep him from freezing to death. Sentence was suspended at the hearing before Borough Recorder Dolliver today.

Dinner for Bride-to-Be.

Mrs. John B. Dumont gave a dinner last evening in honor of Miss Janet Wildey. Covers were laid for twelve, those present being Miss Wildey, Miss Janet Wildey, Miss Eleanor Waring, Miss Annie Fisk and Miss Dorothy Fisk and Willard Wadsworth, J. Dunbar Wright, Charles Fisk, J. Dumont and John B. Dumont, Jr.

The Odd Fellows will hold a dance at Club Hall Friday evening.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

With the first real snow fall of winter, the boroughites bethought themselves early of the "snow and ice ordinance" and many got to work with their shovels before the storm ceased. To the pedestrian, however, no particular change for the better was noted, for there were several snowy sidewalks near the business section last night. No action had been taken by the borough officials up to noon today to clean walks for the delinquents. The storm was too light to demonstrate the difficulties which may arise from omitting the clause from the ordinance requiring property owners to clean their gutters, but many shoveled out their gutters voluntarily when they cleaned the sidewalks.

Despite the storm yesterday, several women from the Methodist church attended the Women's Home Missionary Society meeting held at Cranford. A report was made by Mrs. E. C. Dutcher, recording secretary of the organization.

A musical entertainment will be given in connection with the next meeting of Court Dunellen to be held Monday night. At this meeting the officers for the coming year will be elected, and several candidates initiated.

Routine business was transacted at a meeting of the township committee of Piscataway township held Tuesday night at New Market.

Dr. and Mrs. Peter W. Brakeley returned Monday from a three weeks' sojourn at Hammonton and Atlantic City.

Mrs. Thomas Beck, of Elizabeth, visited yesterday at the home of her mother, Mrs. Emma E. Baldwin.

"Oak Farm," which will be given in Excelsior Hall tonight, under the auspices of Twilight Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., will be given by the same cast as presented the play in the Casino a short time ago.

The snow storm of Tuesday night will at least give the rabbits a short respite, as the game laws forbid hunting them while a tracking snow is on the ground.

Only the regular routine fire business was transacted by the members of B. & E. Co. at the monthly meeting of the company held last night.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Flannery, of New York, have been visiting Mr. Flannery's sister, Mrs. George H. Johnston, of Westfield avenue.

On account of the storm yesterday but one session of the public school was held, the day's session ending at 1 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. George Harper, of Front street, are entertaining Miss Margaret Harper, of Southold, L. I.

W. S. Harrison has engaged in the carpet weaving business at his home on Front street.

NO MORE "CHECKS" IN CHICAGO; COIN PLENTY.

The Chicago banks are through with clearing house checks and those outstanding will be called in and canceled as rapidly as possible. The sum of $140,000 was canceled today, and from this time forwards the cancellation will proceed at a rapid rate. The printing of the checks has been discontinued. No more will be issued.

The certificates were used in making the clearings yesterday. Many large companies employing larbe numbers of men paid off in currency Tuesday and yesterday for the first time since the financial stringency began.

Savings banks are paying out money to most of their customers, unless the withdrawal is manifestly for the purpose of hoarding.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Lew Welch, in "The Shoemaker," will be the attraction at the New Plainfield theatre tonight.

The playgoer is considered fortunate if a production furnishes either a good plot, a good cast or a single song hit. It is no wonder then that George M. Cohan's "The Honeymooners," which has twenty big musical numbers, a powerful plot, a superb cast and forty dashing chorus girls is breaking all records for popularity on the road just as it did all last summer in New York at the New Amsterdam theatre, where during the entire heated term it played to winter prices and record making receipts. "The Honeymooners" is the best Cohan song show up to date and it is ppresented better than any Cohan piece heretofore. "The Honeymooners" is packed with excellence of song, music, story, cast, chorus, and stage costuming. It is booked for next Saturday afternoon and night at the New Plainfield theatre.

To travel constantly up and down this old world of ours, and regardless of time or expense collect and concentrate into one program, all that will incite your interest, wonder and amusement; this is the unique vocation of Lyman H. Howe, who will show his new program of moving pictures at the New Plainfield theatre next Thursday night. Time, patient research and money in themselves are not enough to insure the success he has achieved. A knowledge of the public taste, a knowledge of what is really interesting and what is not, what to take and what to ignore, is absolutely necessary in the collection of a program that must be uniformly and universally interesting. Mr. Howe's many years of experience as an exhibitor annually to over a million people, has surely qualified him as perhaps, no other exhibitor, is qualified.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

The Sunshine Mission Band, of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church will meet this afternoon. The subject will be "China," and Miss Gladys Chase will lead.

"Personal Sights on the River Nile" will be the subject of the illustrated lecture to be given at the Y. M. C. A. Friday night, December 13, for the benefit of Faith chapel building fund.

Rev. A. C. McCrea, of the First M. E. church, will give his illustrated lecture in Vincent chapel tomorrow night on "The Great Southwest." The affair is under the auspices of the Epworth League.

The women's home and foreign missionary societies of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church will hold a union praise service in the parlors of the church tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. There will be an address by Mrs. William Nelson.

Rev. A. C. McCrea, of the First M. E. church, has accepted the offer of Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, of the First Baptist church, of the edifice for the holding of the laymen's conference in connection with Newark conference next April. At the laymen's conference delegates will be chosen to attend the General Conference in Baltimore next year.

NURSES' ASSOCIATION IS IN ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The presentation of a bill for $157.88 for expenses incurred by the ways and means committee of the New Jersey State Nurses' Association in advocating the passage of House bill 379, providing for the establishment of a board of examiners of registered nurses, created much dissatisfaction at the annual meeting of that organization, which was held Tuesday in the East Orange Free Library.

The bill was presented in one item, and the members criticised the committee for not having it itemized so that the association might know how the funds were expended. A motion was passed expressing dissatisfaction over the lack of an itemized bill.

Mrs. D'Arcy Stephen, the State president, said that she regretted the great expense the association had been put to in trying to secure the passage of the measure, which was an amendment to the act of April 7, 1903, and which died in committee.

The secretary reported a total of 250 on the rolls, with a paid membership of 166. Twenty-six new members were admitted during the year. According to the treasurer's report the association has a balance on hand of $9.99.

Acquaintanceship Conference.

Supervising Principal H. C. Krebs, of the North Plainfield public schools, together with the principal and teachers of the high school and grammar departments, have issued invitations to the parents and friends of the pupils to attend a meeting to be held at the Somerset street school, Friday night, December 13, at 8 o'clock for purposes of acquaintanceship and conference.

GOLF.

The open championship tournament of Great Britain, which will be held at Prestwick next year, will begin on Tuesday, June 16. This competition was last held at Prestwick in 1903, when Harry Vardon won with a score of 300, six strokes better than his brother, Tom, who was second. The amateur championship will be held at Sandwich the latter part of May. This tournament when last held at Sandwich, in 1904, was made memorable because of the success of Walter J. Travis, the American entrant. Apropos of this achievement "Golf Illustrated" says:

"Although the average American golf has certainly improved, it may be doubted if there is any American amateur at the present moment quite so good as Mr. Travis was in 1901. Still, there is Mr. Travers, the present amateur champion of the United States, who, some say, is better. But, unfortunately, he has not Mr. Travis' wonderful temperament, and in any case there is yet no word of his coming. Of course, what has happened before may happen again, but on the whole it seems much more likely at the present moment that the open should return to France than that the amateur should go to America."

Few devotees of the game realize to what extent golf has changed during the last ten years. In order to more fully appreciate the transformation, it is but necessary to compare present conditions with those existing when the game was young in this country. It will then be noticed that there were two distinct departures from the orthodox—the adoption of the rubber-cored ball and the general lengthening of the courses. Whether or not they have worked for the good or detriment of the game will probably ever remain a mooted question.

Despite the many hard things said against the rubber core, the latter, in its simplification of the game, has unquestionably aroused the green committees from their lethargic state. In the old days their duties were light, little being required beyond the occasional making of a new tee, or green, and once in a great while a new bunker. In fact, to see that the greenkeeper kept his men at work was about all that was required of the average committee. There were, of course, clubs whose committeemen possessed both knowledge and experience, but, for all that, it had become the general practise to leave almost everything to the greenkeeper.

The advent of the new ball, and the great increase in the number of players which it has effected, has wrought havoc to the turf, so that nature can no longer, unaided, be trusted to keep the links in condition. Consequently, one new requisite now with the green committees is that they must be composed of men learned in the healing of the soil. But, aside from increasing the number of golfers, the rubber-cored ball has made the game so much easier that courses, which, in the old days, were an adequate test with the gutty, are overcome far too easily now.

BASEBALL.

Both of the major baseball leagues will hold meetings next week. The American League will convene in Chicago on December 11, while the National League will meet in New York at the Waldorf on the same date. It is believed that a number of important trades will be made among the National League clubs, as the American League clubs have already completed several big deals.

The New York Nationals, it is said, will try to make trades with Cincinnati and St. Louis with the idea of bringing Pitcher Karger, Outfielder Mitchell and Second Baseman Huggins to the Polo Grounds. But before such trades can be made it is said that Manager McGraw will have to give up Bresnahan, Browne, Bowerman and McGinnity, together with a cash bonus, which is highly improbable. The Boston Nationals want to trade off Fred Tenny, the veteran first baseman, but nothing will be done until it is definitely known whether Joe Kelley will sign a Boston contract or not. New York, Pittsburg and Philadelphia are said to be after Tenny. The Cincinnati club wants a manager to fill Ned Hanlon's shoes and Gerry Herrmann is said to be after Bresnahan. The St. Louis club is anxious to secure Bowerman and McGinnity, while the Philadelphia club is reported to be willing to make a deal for Dan McGann. The Chicago and Brooklyn clubs will stand pat, from present indications.

In the American League it is understood that Stovall of Cleveland and Unglaub of Boston are on the market. The New York Americans will make no more deals for new players, as Manager Griffith thinks he has done enough. Fred Glade, the pitcher secured in the big deal from St. Louis, is well fixed financially, so that he does not care whether he plays ball again or not. But President Farrell has made him a handsome offer, and if Glade accepts the pitching department of the New York team will be completed. Both leagues have a number of reforms to consider, but there seems to be no chance for a change in the playing rules.

DISCUSSED O. W. HOLMES

Rev. William R. Mulford's First Talk in Series on Great American Authors.

MANY HEAR HIS ADDRESS.

Second Lecture on J. Fenimore Cooper to Be Given at the Home of Mrs. Lemuel W. Serrell Next Wednesday.

The first of a series of talks on "American Authors," by Rev. William R. Mulford, rector of All Saints' church, Scotch Plains, was given yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. H. LeRoy Whitney, on East Seventh sereet, before a large and appreciative gathering of Plainfielders. His subject was "Oliver Wndell Holmes." Mention was made of the fact that the author was the father of Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, of the United States Supreme Court, whose works on the common law are used in the law schools of this country as text books.

In the sketch of the noted writer among other facts presented were that he was born at Cambridge, Mass., August 29, 1809, and died at Boston, October 7, 1894. He was the son of the Rev. Abiel Holmes, a Congregational minister, and of Sarah Wendell, of Dutch ancestry, and related to many well-known families in New England. He entered Harvard at the age of 16, and graduated in 1829, in a class, many of whose members afterward became famous. For a time he studied law, but afterward abandoned it for a course of medicine at Harvard, and later took the M. D. degree at his alma mater in 1836. Two years afterward he was appointed professor of anatomy and physiology at Dartmouth College, and in 1847 was called to the same chair in the Massachusetts Medical School, Boston.

In 1882, at the age of 73 years, he retired from his professorship. His literary career dated from his student days, when he found amusement in dashing off quaint and humorous verse, the first collection of which appeared in 1836, supplemented by a further volume in 1848. Selections from both these volumes were at an early period published in England, where they won a wide audience. All of his writings displayed a masterly command of metric form, with an uncommon freshness and originality. In 1890 he made a further and final appearance in letters, when he published "Over the Tea-cups," full of the old-time wit, wisdom and humor.

The second talk by Mr. Mulford, on "James Fenimore Cooper," will be given at the home of Mrs. Lamuel William Serrell, on West Seventh street, Wednesday afternoon, December 11, and the third at the home of Mrs. George S. Ring, on a date to be decided later. The patronesses for the series are Mrs. D. H. Rowland, Mrs. C. J. Fisk, Mrs. B. A. Hegeman, Mrs. W. M. Wherry, Jr., Mrs. M. A. Zook, Mrs. J. R. Truell, Mrs. A. B. Davies, Mrs. L. W Serrell, Mrs. H. LeRoy Whitney, Mrs. George S. Ring, Mrs. F. H. Ball, Miss Elizabeth Cock, Mrs. J. C. Peck and Mrs. William Dryckinch.

Jury Foreman Refuses Gift.

Franklin Conklin, who was foreman of the grand jury of Essex county, which has just completed its work, rebelled at the custom of juries making a gift to the foreman and refused to accept one. His colleagues, however, gave him a handsomely engrossed set of resolutions at a dinner in the Hotel Montclair at Montclair last night. James Valentine, of Glen Ridge, a member of the jury, was toastmaster.

terests—wholesale drug and grocerymen of the larger cities of this and other States, the wholesale and retail milk dealers, the grangers, the proprietary medicine men, the canners and preserve manufacturers of South Jersey. All interests were patiently listened to and consideration paid to their arguments.

"Dr. Henry Mitchell, as secretary of S. B. of H., under whose management comes the execution of the law defended the various sections of the bill attacked, while Miss Lakey, of this league, and Paul V. Flynn, of the "N. J. Trade Review," rendered valuable assistance in smoothing out the difficulties. Upon one subject, Miss Lakey and myself could not agree. The bill provided that the law should become effective October 1, 1908, nineteen months off. From her standpoint vital to every housekeeper and representing the 'Consumers' League, she was right, but we were confronted with this condition—an effective law in October, 1908, or no law at all.

"Our South Jersey industries with storehouses full, undoubtedly of pure goods, but not complying with the law, would be condemned and be made unsalable. The grocers of Newark, the wholesale druggists of Jersey City, with stores of drugs on their shelves, and in their storehouses, which, undoubtedly they could brand, but at great expense. It resolved itself to an effective law without opposition operative in 1908, or a lawsuit against the constitutionality of the law on the grounds of confiscation.

Pass Pure Food Law.

"The life of a legislator is a hard one when he must decide between conflicting interests. The commercial and industrial interests of the State must be protected next to our health, and in deciding to give them this relief, we do not believe we impaired very much the health of the State. Miss Lakey went down with her colors flying, fighting to the end, and finally turned in and nobly assisted in the passage of the bill. This passed the Senate and Assembly and was signed by the Governor. This law may not be perfect, I believe it is as good as we could get at that time, and in the years to come we can mend it and meet the needs of our people until it is perfect. It has been attacked; it will be attacked, principally because milk is included in the bill, but law teaches by example, agitation enlivens interest and helps the cause.

"There is another subject that is one of the purposes of this convention. Slaughter house inspection. What the bill does. One of the objects of the attendance by Miss Lakey at the hearings was to have an amendment for slaughter house inspection, incorporated in the pure food bill. Upon the suggestion of S. G. H., it was made the subject of a new bill. With the horrible revelations of the conditions of the stock yards of chicago fresh in their minds, it did not take the Senate long to pass it. It failed of passage, however, in the house—not from any opposition—there was some at first. It was on the calendar to be passed when at the unusual demonstration caused by a frenzied leader attempting to adjourn the house, threw everything in confusion. A tired Assembly exhausted by a lengthy session adjourned before it, with many more important bills, were reached, and it fell by the wayside. I intend to present this bill again at the coming session and can reasonably assure the members of the league that its chances of passing are excellent.

Citizen's Duty.

And, now, just this word in conclusion:

"Every citizen of this State should support by word and deed the noble work in this league. With the example of these noble women who sacrifice their time for this cause, every citizen should give it his loyal support for pure food. We love our country. We believe it is the finest country under the blue sky. We believe in our form of government, and its ability to fulfill the destiny of this—the greatest Christian nation in the world.

"While we are legislating for future generations of Americans, we mus also consider the vast hordes at our doors, asking for adoption. If we wish to keep up our high standard of race, we must teach them the lessons of purity. Crossing recently on one of the ferryboats to New York, I found it crowded with emigrants, who had evidently just arrived. I noticed one group in particular, whom I took to be a father and mother, with five young children. They were in the front of the boat, gazing out over the water with wondering eyes, where New York loomed vast, mysterious, almost appaling to the gaze. I asked myself what was the impelling force that had induced this entire family to brave the perils of the deep, to sever all home ties, in fact, to burn their bridges behind them. Was it the inspiration of hope in the breast of the father and mother that this country offered better advantages than the old world for themselves? No, it was the hope that this new world held something better for their children, and as these emigrants stood at the portal of the vast region beyond, of which New York is the threshold, I thought of the confidence that family reposed in us, as a nation—in our form of government—of the tremendous responsibility it placed upon us, the sons of the builders and framers of this great commonwealth.

"We adopt these poorly nourished and improverished sons of Europe in the belief that as they absorb the free air of America and become desirable citizens, we receive them into our great national family, let us teach them the value of citizenship, the value of suffrage under a government where every citizen is a sovereign. They come seeking fortune and wealth. Let us see to it that they find health also, so that the high standard of the American race may be continued. Let us rise to this responsibility, thinking of the generations that are to follow us, thinking also of the example of Him who said 'Inasmuch," etc."

GUNNERS DECIDE TO PAY THEIR OWN WAY HEREAFTER

The executive committee of the Association of New Jersey Sportsmen, composed of Colonel Anthony R. Kuser, Harry S. Scovel, Edward Winslow and George Batten, met in the State House at Trenton Tuesday and agreed on the following recommendations to the Legislature in regard to shooting. The committee will report back to the association in Newark a week from tomorrow, and it is likely that its findings will be adopted:

To abolish spring shooting entirely.

To abolish woodcock shooting during July.

To prohibit the sale of game in this State.

An open season for woodcock, commencing October 1.

Limiting the amount of game which can be killed by one sportsman in one day.

Non-resident and alien gunners to take out licenses at $10 apiece.

Resident gunners to take out a license at $1 apiece.

The sportsmen present believed that if the State licensed gunners at $1 and non-resident gunners at $10, there would result a fund large enough to stock the State without any expense from the State treasury.

Protest Against River Front Signs.

The plan of the Lackawanna Railroad Company to install a monster light, with 1,500,000 candle power, the invention of a Newarker, in front of its terminal at Hoboken, has met with protest from the river jilots, who claim that the presence of big advertising signs, highly illuminated, along the river front, prevents their seeing beyond to avoid other craft on the water. At the next meeting of Harbor Association No. 1, Marine Masters, Mates and Pilots, action is promised looking to a modification of such signs.

NEW CURRENCY MEASURE

Fowler and Four Others to Frame Bill to be Reported After Holidays.

BURTON, OF OHIO, AS ONP.

New Jersey Congressman to Choose Membership of Sub Committee Either Today or Tomorrow.

The new banking and currency committee of the House at Washington met yesterday morning and for two and a half hours discussed the currency situation in all of its phases, its causes, effects and its remedy.

Upon each of these questions there was a wide difference of opinion, but it was said after the adjournment that the committee was more nearly in accord on the matter of the necessity for some action than any previous banking and currency committee has been for several Congresses. All the members took part in the discussion and made suggestions.

Chairman Charles N. Fowler stated that he had been authorized by the committee to name a sub-committee of five members which will draft a measure to submit to the full committee.

This he will do either today or tomorrow. As soon as this measure is prepared it will be presented to the full committee, which will then grant hearings to financiers and business men whose interests are most affected and who have opinions to advance.

This is taken to mean that no measure can be reported to the House much if any before the holiday recess, and certainly that no action can be had until after the reassembling of Congress. The time when the bill will be reported will depend very largely upon the time required by the cob-committee to report and upon the length of the hearing granted.

There was a general agreement among the members of the committee yesterday that there should be a currency bill providing a remedy for the recent situation reported and acted upon in the House with as little delay as possible.

Chairman Fowler and Representative Burton will be two of the members of the committee to draft the proposed measure.

Senator Clay yesterday introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to supply the Senate with a list of the national banks which are designated as United States depositories and to give the amount that has been deposited in each during the year 1907. The resolution also calls for information as to the amount of government indebtedness which can be paid off before maturity. The resolutions went over until today.

Senator Culberson introduced a resolution which was similar to Mr. Clay's in many respects, but somewhat more specific. It makes inquiry concerning the number of banks which were United States depositories on October 1 and November 18, respectively, in each State and territory, and also makes inquiry as to the total amount on deposit in each institution on both dates mentioned. He made an effort to secure immediate consideration of the resolution, but on objection it went over until today.

Senator Culberson also introduced a resolution requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate what proportion of the $50,000,000 of the Panama Canal bonds and of the $100,000,000 of certificates recently issued by the Treasury have been awarded. Action was deferred.

Contrary to general expectation, Senator Aldrich, chairman of the committee on finance of the Senate, will not introduce a currency bill. His plan is to receive all suggestions for currency legislation, to lay them before his committee and to have them fully discussed in order that the committee itself may frame a bill which may be reported to the Senate.

DO PUBLIC SCHOOL PUPILS LACK LITERARY CULTURE?

Claiming that there is a lack of literary culture among public school graduates because of a failure to educate the reading tastes of the school children, Prof. Maximilian P. E. Groszmann outlined practical methods for the teaching of reading and literature in local schools at a lecture before teachers of the city and borough schools in the city high school auditorium yesterday afternoon. He criticised the old school methods of the "reader," and stated that reading is begun too early in the course of instruction at the local schools.

Dr. Groszmann assigns the cause of this lack of literary culture to several causes, primarily the failure to adapt the reading matter to the successive interests of the children, and the failure to educate the tastes of the children for good reading. He stated that a few complete books be substituted for the "readers" now in use, and that the interest of the children could be better mainained by the adaption of such books. He said that in consequence of the lack of interest showed by the students in school reading, they are likely to suppliment the school reading by trashy, sensational reading at home, because nothing read in the class room appeals to them. The lecturer stated that the methods used in present day teaching had much to do with the lessening of the interest of the children.

"Reading is begun too early in our schools," said Dr. Groszmann, and went on to show from the growth of the race from primitive conditions that reading, with writing, are late acquisitions, and that the artificial stimulus of early years tends rather to be detrimental than beneficial. The speaker went on to discuss the physiology and psychology of reading, taking up the hygiene of reading, as considered from the size of type, and emphasizing the visualizing of the printed page by the reader. He stated that much oral work should proceed book in the study of reading.

Dr. Groszmann said that the child's tastes for good reading should be trained by giving him good literature from the beginning. He said that all children should be familiar with poetry, proverbs, sayings, stories, myths and fairy tales from having them read to him before he was old enough to read for himself. Inspiration and information should be the principal aims in reading, and for this reason care must be taken in the selection of reading matter for the schools. The children should be taught how to read and the pupil should be encouraged to read at home and report on what he has read. The school reading should follow along the lines of the home reading and should be controlled by the child's natural development and successive interests.

QUEEREST MAN IN CONGRESS.

John T. Lenahan Absolutely Snubs Chance to Puff Himself in Directory.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 5.—The editor of the Congressional Directory doesn't know what to make of John T. Lenahan, Democrat, of Wilkes-Barre, who succeeded Henry W. Palmer as Representative from the Eleventh Pennsylvania district. Lenahan failed to furnish the editor with a biographical sketch of himself before Congress met, and the first edition of the director was printed with nothing in it about the birth, education and career of the new member from the Eleventh district, except that he was elected to the Sixtieth Congress by so many votes against so many votes for his Roosevelt "Square Deal" and Prohibition party competitors.

Greatly worried, the editor of the directory, immediately after the first edition was out, got busy in a new attempt to induce Lenahan to disclose the leading facts in his career. But up to date these appeals have been of no avail and the second edition of the Congressional Directory goes to press today.

It is the first instance known in modern times of a member or Senator failing to furnish ample data for a biographical sketch in the directory. Usually they write their own sketches and make them so long that if they were published as written the directory would be larger than Webster's Unabridged.

Democrats for Early Convention.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 5.—Learning that William J. Bryan is planning to have himself nominated for President by the Democratic national convention in advance of the Republican convention, the members of the Republican national committee, which is called to meet here December 7, are considering holding the convention at an unusually early date. Harry New, acting chairman of the committee, has arrived in Washington advocating June 1 as the date to be fixed.

Father Shoots Son-in-law.

Morristown, Dec. 5.—Hearing that Carlo Carriere was about to desert his wife, Amelia, sixteen years old, her father, Joseph Carrello, shot and fatally wounded the young man and accidentally wounded his daughter yesterday afternoon. Carrello, who is sixty years old, was immediately put under arrest by Special Policeman Antonacci, who was standing near by.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Dec. 8: ("Missions.") "God in the world."—II Cor. v. 18-20. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself."

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

Passages for reference—Matt. i, 21; Luke xix, 10; John iii, 16; xx, 21.

It is an easy matter to live in this God's world for years and not come to any just realization that there is any God in it at all. Watch the people around you, listen to their talk for awhile and then say if you think the majority act and speak as if God was a living reality to them, as if He was the one only supreme reality. To come a little closer to the mark, ask yourself if you act and speak—nay, if in your inner, secret life you do earnestly and feelingly grasp it as the most momentous fact of your existence—the fact that God is in His world.

In a certain dim, faroff way we do believe that all things had a beginning and there must have been a Creator of all things. In a way that we vainly fancy is scientific most of us believe in the supreme rulership of the natural world by Law. We spell it with a big L and half believe we have explained something, while all the time we are covertly replacing God by this indefinite something we call Law, spelled with a big L.

Much of this comes from intellectual laziness. We are too indolent to think hard and deep on this all important fact, or on any other, for that matter. More of our difficulty comes from a dread of knowing the reality, for a certain stubbornness of will resists the duty which we instinctively feel would come pressingly upon us if once we should come face to face with the consciousness that God is hell and is ruling and calls us to duty in His service.

But God is in His world. This is a very solmen, a very momentous fact. It is important for us to recoguize it. No other truth is so important. Better hold still and let this get hold of you, get a firm hold. The whole ongoing of the world is the result of His being here. He is here for a purpose. What that is you will hardly discover in the columns of the newspaper or the current magazine. You will be keen eyed and quick eared if you catch it in the whirl of business or in the excitement of the social circle. But He is here and for a purpose. And that purpose is working all powerfully under all business and society and behind and through all the newspaper and magazine world.

Slowly it may be, surely it certainly is, that His purpose is working steadily to bring this world to Himself. Ungodly it does seem in a fearful degree, this old world of ours, but God is in it, and it is lifting into light. The leaven is in it and is working through the whole mass.

Jesus Christ has been here, and the world can never be its old self. It is coming into a new life. Solemn it is, but it is also joyous, glorious. Gladly triumphant it shall be.

You may not find any theory of the atonement which satisfies you completely. You may not have a consistent theology and may doubt the possibility of constructing one, but it is still wonderously satisfying that Jesus seeks and saves the lost in these days, saves even we. Still more, He is making us over into His likeness. We know it. We are more conscious of it than of aught else. We are becoming reconciled to God, His ways and plans. He rules us, rules in us, and we are glad. We are no longer afraid. Pain ceases to be evil as we endure for His sake. God is with us. We live in and for Him.

Sentence Sermons.

The test of your Christian character should be that you are a joy bearing agent to the world.—Henry Ward Beecher.

You may depend upon it that he is a good man whose intimate friends are all good.—Lavater.

Let God do with me what He will. It will be either heaven itself or some beginning of it.—Mountford.

Nobility of character manifests itself at loopholes when it is not provided with large doors.—Mary E. Wilkins.

A duty well done and systematically carried out becomes easy, while only occasional response is a struggle every time.—Rev. J. R. Kendall.

Lots of people let their daily manna spoil while they pray for butter and sugar to spread on it.—Henry F. Cope.

Drudgery is as necessary to call out the treasures of the mind as harrowing and planting those of the earth.—Margaret Fuller.

Ten thousand of the greatest faults in our neighbors are of less consequence to us than one of the smallest in ourselves.—Whately.

Lives Like Stars.

It is not what the best men do, but what they are, that constitutes their truest benefaction to their fellow men. Certainly, in their own little sphere, it is not the most active people to whom we owe the most. Among the common people whom we know it is not necessarily those who are busiest, not those who, meteorlike, are ever on the rush after some visible change and work. It is the lives like the stars which simply pour down on us the calm light of their bright and faithful bing, up to which we look and out of which we gather the deepest calm and courage.—Phillips Brooks.

The Great Moment.

There are certain times in a young life when God comes near to the soul. Those moments are the soul's opportunities, and every one neglected is an enduring loss of joy and power. As Victor Hugo puts it, "Heaven, on occasion, half opens its arms to us, and that is the great moment."—Forward.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 8, 1907.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—Lessons from an old love story. The book of Ruth. Read in the meeting.—Ruth ii, 10-20.

Benjamin Franklin being called upon to speak at a meeting of a scientific society in Paris, whose members were mostly atheists, recited the Bible story of Ruth. His hearers were charmed with the story. One of them was so enthusiastic that he wanted to know if it were published and, if so, declared that he would like to purchase the book that contained it. Franklin answered that it was published and when asked where quietly answered, "In a book called the Bible." This incident has other lessons, but it is also a splendid testimony to the beauty of the story of Ruth as a romance. And it is one of the most charming of romances, and, moreover, it is true—truth stranger (and even more romantic) than fiction.

The story may be very briefly recalled. In time of famine Elimelech and Naomi, husband and wife, with their two sons, went down into the land of Moab. Here the sons both married, the wife of one being Orpah and that of the other Ruth. It so happened in course of time that all three men died. Naomi therefore determined to return to Judaea. She advised her daughters-in-law to remain in Moab, and Orpah consented to do so, kissing her goodby. But "Ruth clung to her mother-in-law" and said: "Entreat me not to leave thee or to return from following thee, for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge. Thy people shall be my people and thy God my God. Where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried." Naomi could not resist such pleading, and Ruth returned to her home with her. She was sent to glean in the fields of Boaz, a rich and influential man, and a mutual love arose between them. Boaz took Ruth as his wife, and through this marriage she became one of the two gentiles who belonged to the ancestry of our Lord Jesus Christ.

This is indeed an old love story, but one that in various phases is frequently repeated. But, more than this, it is an instructive love story. (1) It teaches that faithfulness is always rewarded. The faithfulness of Ruth to her mother-in-law has seldom been equaled, much less excelled. But how great was her reward! She found another husband, a better home, and was especially honored in being one of those from whom the Saviour of the world descended. (2) In Ruth's life story we have also a beautiful illustration of self sacrifice. What a renunciation Ruth made to accompany Naomi—country, home, friends, her gods and her burial place, so sacred to orientals! But here, too, she was highly rewarded. God always rewards sacrifices made for love, and especially for love of Him. (3) This story reminds us of God's love for us. Boaz, the rich and powerful, loved the humble Ruth. God, the eternal sovereign God, loves us, though we are infinitely inferior to Him. Do we repay His love? Do we love Him in return, as Ruth did Boaz, and are we willing to serve Him?

President Roosevelt's Greeting.

While the international Christian Endeavor convention was in session recently at Seattle, Wash., President Roosevelt sent the following greeting to General Secretary Shaw:

The White House.
Washington, June 2, 1907.

My Dear Mr. Shaw—I thank you for your letter. Through you I wish to extend to the International Christian Endeavor my heartiest good wishes for the admirable work they are doing. Let me in particular express my earnest hope that you will emphasize as one of the features of your convention the need that the Endeavorers should take a first rank in good citizenship. I am glad you are to endeavor to bring this subject so prominently before this meeting.

It will be a pleasure to accept honorary membership in your Christian Endeavor Patriots' league, for I am sure that with the general purposes and efforts of that league I shall have the heartiest sympathy, though of course I could not commit myself in advance to agree with all of their views without knowing them.

I wish you godspeed in your work because the Christian Endeavorers are working for the things that are vital to the soul, and I believe that they can do much that is of the very greatest value to the cause of good citizenship, for in the last analysis the fundamental requisite of good citizenship from the standpoint of the country is that a man should have the very qualities which make him of real value in the home, in the church, in all the higher relationships of life. Faithfully yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. William Shaw, General Secretary, United Society of Christian Endeavor, Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass.

Never More Than Now.

The state union sends you its congratulations on your past achievements and bids you face the future with stronger purposes and with a dauntless courage. Christian Endeavor never had so much to be thankful for as today. The sky of promise was never so bright, the open doors of opportunity were never so many, the loud ringing calls for an exercise of the heroic never sounded as they do this hour, and, best of all, the great army of the young never mustered so many valiant fighters as now. "Best of all" did I say? It should have been second best, for first and paramount stands the thrilling truth of power from on high, to be had for the asking—power that will vitalize our efforts and make our service of some avail, for ours is Christian Endeavor.—John R. Clements to Yates County (N. Y.) Union Through Convention Bulletin.

CHAPTER XII.

Treachery.

Three hours later Dr. Starva and myself were on the little steamboat en route for Vitznau, a journey of an hour. I had met him at the quay; he was alone. Madame de Varnier, he coolly informed me, had taken an earlier boat. I was not to see her until next morning.

Frankly, I scarcely liked that. I could have wished for a more congenial companion. However, I was embarked on an adventure; and must take things as they came. It was to be a game of give and take. I was deliberately permitting myself to be their tool for the moment; I was to serve their purpose. My wages for the service were to be the opportunity of finding Sir Mortimer Brett. Until I had penetrated the mystery of his disappearance I would be as clay in their hands. Perhaps it might be necessary to be their partner for the nonce in their intrigues. They might wonder at my docility or guilelessness, but they should not question it. That was the delicate task I must bend myself to for the present.

We had seated ourselves well forward and were quite alone, for at this late hour the boat carried few passengers. The wind coming from the snow-clad peaks was piercing. I shivered, but rather from excitement than from the chilly air. Already the lights of Vitznau could be seen dimly through the thick mists.

Dr. Starva, rolling a huge cigar in the corner of his loose, sensual mouth, regarded me fixedly under shaggy eyebrows.

"It is cold. We must have some cognac." Without asking for my assent he summoned a waiter.

Even in so trivial a matter as the appropriateness of refreshments his tone was more a command than an invitation. The cognac would be welcome enough, but one less observing than myself might have noticed the alacrity with which he welcomed the excuse for the liquor.

"Do you know what it is to have a headache?" he asked, and, fumbling clumsily in his waistcoat pocket, he produced a tiny packet.

"No," I said, yawning, and watching him idly.

"Ah, you are fortunate. This little powder is a great benefactor to me. We are close to Vitznau. Through the trees there you can get a glimpse of the hotel we are to stop at."

He pointed at a building a quarter of a mile distant from the landing stage we were fast approaching, holding in mid-air the packet of powder preparatory to placing it on his tongue.

I looked where he pointed; there was not much to see; the mist enveloped everything. The boy approached with the cognac.

My elbows on the table, I fingered carelessly the little glass placed in front of me, while that of Dr. Starva was being filled. As I tippped it toward me I caught a glimpse of a white powder in the bottom of my glass.

The Packet Was Lifted at His Lips.

Dr. Starva's headache powder!

Here was treachery indeed! But I did not move a muscle. I lifted my eyes slowly. Dr. Starva's great head was tipped back. The packet, empty of its powder, of course, was placed at his lips. But his rat-like eyes were watching me narrowly.

I had need to think and act quickly. The powder was a narcotic to deaden my senses. That must be prevented at any cost; and yet he must think that I had taken the drug.

He had called my attention to the hotel while he cleverly slipped the powder into the glass. I ought not to be less adroit.

As the waiter passed around the table his decanter in hand, I thrust out my leg and tripped him up neatly. He fell against Dr. Starva, the decanter still held carefully aloft.

In that moment of confusion I emptied the contents of my glass into my handkerchief. When Starva, furious and perhaps suspicious, pushed the man fiercely from him and looked at me, I was laughing heartily at his mishap, the handkerchief in one hand, the other holding out the glass for the brandy, the fingers closing over it to hide it from his view.

"Sante!" he cried boisterously, and drained the contents of his glass at a gulp. I followed his example, and in spite of the powerful liquor, I tasted (or fancied I tasted) the dregs of the bitter drug.

"Pah!" I cried in disgust, and was careful to hand the glass to the waiter instead of placing it on the table. "I have tasted better brandy than that in my life."

The expression of disgust promptly assured him that I had really drunk the potion given me. But now that I was supposed to have taken it, I wondered precisely what effect it should have on me, and how soon that effect should be felt.

Fortunately, he concerned himself with our luggage, for the boat was almost at the dock. When he returned to my side I greeted him in sleepy indifference. He looked at me keenly. I was not blind to his satisfaction. He shook my shoulder.

"What is it! Are we arrived?" I rose to my feet unsteadily.

"Yes, and it is necessary to hurry."

The handful of passengers had already left the boat. We descended the gangway slowly, Dr. Starva's arm grasping mine.

We entered the closed carriage that awaited us. I lurched clumsily into the vehicle, and sat crouched up in the corner, my head sunk on my breast. I assumed it safe and fitting that I should appear passably indifferent as to what passed now. Certainly by this time the drug would have taken some effect had I swallowed it. But I need not say that I had my wits with me.

My companion unfastened a valise he had brought into the carriage with him. I confess I watched him out of the corner of my eye in some trepidation.

I was thankful when he produced nothing more formidable than a military cloak and a felt hat. To my astonishment he deftly slipped from my shoulders the light covert coat I wore, and took my hat from my head, substituting the garments he had taken from his bag.

I could have laughed aloud, his confidence in my condition was so absolute, and his antics so extraordinary. When I left the carriage presently, surely the driver must see the change in my attire, and have his suspicions—unless he were in Dr. Starva's confidence!

And this fact did not escape me:

The hat did not ingulf me, as it must have done had it been Dr. Starva's.

Then if it were not his own—

In an instant I had guessed something of his game.

CHAPTER XIII.

I Masquerade Unwillingly.

It must have been after midnight when the carriage drew up under the porte-cochere of the hotel. Dr. Starva alighted and met the concierge at the vestibule. I heard little of what was said at first, but the surprise of the concierge was evident. He tossed his arms about, and burst into excited protests. Presently (and I could see that Starva was annoyed at the action) he came to the door of the carriage and peered within. I sat huddled up in the corner, apparently asleep.

"He is very ill—his Excellency!" cried the concierge in French.

"Listen to me," sternly replied Starva in the same language. "That is not his Excellency, imbecile. That is only a tourist, a Mr. Haddon. You understand," he repeatedly slowly, shaking the concierge by the lapel of his gorgeous coat, "that is only a tourist."

The fellow looked at Dr. Starva, bewildered.

"Mais, mais, mais—" he stammered in expostulation, pointing at me.

"Appearances are sometimes treacherous" said Starva grimly, and aided with marked carelessness, "Is Madame de Varnier arrived?"

"An hour ago," muttered the man, his round eyes still staring at me.

"Then do you think, fool, that his Excellency would come to this hotel at midnight, and at the hour that she arrives? Are there no tongues to talk? Are there no eyes to pry? If Mr. Haddon"—he emphasized the name—"prefers to be nursed by a beautiful woman, shall I, his physician, refuse? But for his Excellency to be nursed by a beautiful woman—at least," he added meaningly, "for the world to know it—now do you understand?"

He towered over the little concierge, staring down at him fiercely vindictive. At the same time he slipped into the servant's unresisting hand a number of crisp notes. The hand of the concierge closed over them lovingly; his broad, good-humored face slowly expanded into a smile of perfect comprehension.

"But yes, I see it all as clearly as the nose on my face." The little wretch placed his forefinger on that organ and winked.

PROPHET DEVOE MORALIZES ON EVILS OF CARD PLAYING.

Church people in Hackensack, especially the women who devote much time to charitable work and frequently give card parties for charity, are much wrought up over the letter which Weather Prophet Devoe sent to the Improvement Commission Monday night.

Devoe was recently made a member of the Committe in Civic Righteousness by the Classis of the Reformed church, and he says his presence on this committee prompted the letter. Among other things he says:

"It is my duty to look after the proper enforcement of righteous laws of Bergen county, and when they are not enforced to ascertain why. I am sorry to say that gambling has been allowed to continue undisturbed for several years. I am not here to find fault, but to offer co-operation and assistance. I knew your officers of the law would have very little trouble to control the ignorant and the vicious if church members did not stand in the way of law enforcement, especially when it comes to progressive euchre and bridge whist parties for benevolent purposes.

"Must we have one law for the rich and the churchman and another for the poor and the bartender? I would recommend that you notify every minister and every priest in Hackensack that you are ready to strictly enforce the laws of our State against gambling, and ask for their co-operation."

Somerset Council, No. 104, Jr. O. U. A. M., will meet tomorrow night and celebrate the initiation of the 300th member. An informal program will be presented, followed by a smoker.

Mrs. Frederick Phillips, of West Front street, improves slowly from a severe attack of rheumatism.

MINSTRELS MAKE A "HIT"

Franklin Council's Troupe Delights a Big Audience at the Casino.

FIRST PART A BIG FEATURE.

Conventional Half Circle a Pretty Effect—Performance Followed by Dancing.

Before a capacity audience at the Casino, last night, the amateur minstrel troupe of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., made its second annual appearance in blackface entertainment. The program presented was one of the best of its kind for the season and brought round after round of applause for the various performers. The improvement over last year's show was easily to be seen and the troupe has set a pace that will make other embryo Dockstader-Primroses use double exertion to keep up with.

The curtain rose at 8:20 on as pretty a conventional circle as any amateur minstreals have yet conceived. The soloists and chorus were in spick-and-span white uniforms while the end men wore red and blue suits, set off by a George Primrose frock coat. Clarence Rittenhouse, as interlocutor, looked imposing and self-possessed in evening dress. With the proper shading of lights, the effect was perfect and resulted in a burst of generous applause.

The comedians on the ends were William J. Firstbrook, Harry Holmes and Harry Knight, handling the tambos, and Harry Hoffman, Frank Herman and Clarence Bilyeu shaking the bones. All had a good line of "gags" and several with a local flavor went with a "scream." Messrs. Firstbrook and Holmes were encored several times for the clever rendition of their songs, the former giving "In Monkey Land" and the latter "Lulu and Her La La La." Job Lee, a member of the chorus, made one of the hits of the evening with a tenor solo, "Queen of the Earth." His singing was easily the best of the evening.

The other end songs and solos were as follows: "Moses Andrew Jackson, Good Bye," Messrs. Firstbrook, Holmes, Knight, Herman, Hoffman and Bilyou; "I'd Live as I'd Die for You," Clarence Rittenhouse; "I'd Rather Two-Step than Waltz, Bill," Clarence Bilyeu; "And a Little Bit More," Harry Hoffman; "For Old Time Sake," George Mead; "Gratitude," Harry Knight; "I've Said My Last Farewell, Good Bye," Messrs. Firstbrook and Hoffman. The finale was "Honey Boy," sung by Job Lee with the assistance of the entire company.

In the olio, the opening number was an acrobatic and contortionist novelty by Bert Hansen, a North Plainfield boy who is well known to local audiences. Musical Stewart, ets all manner of harmony and strange sounds out of every conceivable sort of instrument, contributed an enjoyable twenty minutes, being assisted on the piano by Miss Mary Radford. The feature act of the performance was given by Eddie Clark, a professional vaudeville artist. He is an expert juggler and his marvelous handling of rubber balls, cigar boxes, lamps, walking sticks and other paraphernalia, helped out by a fine line of comedy, "brought down the house."

The entertainment concluded with an afterpiece entitled "A Night in a Sanitarium" in which the characters were taken as follows: "Dr. Out-of-Patience," Harry Holmes; "Sassy Sam," William J. Firstbrook; "Shadow," a retired servant, William Hartpence; patients, Harry Knight, Roy DeCamp, George Rittenhouse, Frank Herman and Harry Southard. Dancing was taken up after the performance, music being furnished by Harold Cook's orchestra, which also accompanied the soloists and chorusses.

Taken Back to Asylum.

Harold C. Wilson, of the firm of Fowler & Wilson, who recently escaped from the Morris Plains Asylum, was picked up at Elizabeth Tuesday night by Policeman Fritz at Cherry and Murray streets, who took the demented man to police headquarters for safe keeping. Yesterday he was taken back to the asylum. Wilson, since his escape, had been in Boston, from which place he returned to New York Tuesday evening and came to Elizabeth on a train which reached the city at 7:45 o'clock. He sent a telegram to his wife that he was coming home and was met at the train by his brother-in-law, who took him to a restaurant for supper and afterward brought him to his residence. Some hours later he got out and was wandering about the streets when he met the policeman. He was quietly taken away shortly after midnight from the police station by Detective-Sergeant Murphy and another policeman. He was well dressed when he reached Elizabeth and carried in his hand a new suit-case

Outbreak of Miners Feared.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 5.—As a result of a sudden new outbreak at Goldfield, Nev., where upward of ten thousand miners are on strike, President Roosevelt was last evening requested to telegraph from the Governor of the State to hold federal troops in readiness to assist the local authorities. General Oliver, acting Secretary of War, and General Bell, chief of staff, went hurriedly to the White House to advise with the President and arrange for troops to be sent at a moment's notice from San Francisco, the nearest point to the scene of trouble. While versions of the trouble vary, the direct cause is said to be the refusal of the miners to accept the cashier's certificates of the John S. Cook & Co. bank in half payment for their wages. They demand cash.

"Hello Girl" Had 3 Husbands.

New York, Dec. 5.—Of the three husbands she had before her twenty-first birthday, a telephone girl of Brooklyn, whose maiden name was Matilda Yates already has had one taken away by the courts, and through the appointment of Henry M. O'Neil, of No. 170 Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn, as guardian ad litem for his seventeen-year-old son, Edward, it was learned yesterday that proceedings will be brought to take the second from her.

President of Sugar Trust Dead.

New York, Dec. 5.—Henry O. Havemeyer, president of the American Sugar Refining Company for the last sixteen years, died at Merrivale, his country home at Commack, L. I., at three o'clock yesterday afternoon. His fortune is estimated at $70,000,000.

GUILTY OF FORGING WILL

W. H Skillman Convicted of Getting Fortune by Forging His Friend's Signature.

JURY OUT THIRTY-SIX HOURS.

Defendant Tried Twice in a Year for Making Spurious Will of William Lanehart.

William H. Skillman, the aged horticulturist and ex-President of the New Jersey Horticultural Society, who a year ago was accused of forging the will of the late William Lanehart, his old friend and neighbor, was found guilty at the Somerset County Court at Somerville last night.

The case went to the jury at the end of the second trial at 3 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. Judge Booraem kept the jurors locked up all Tuesday night and all day Wednesday. At 6 o'clock last night the jury asked for instructions on some minor matters, but reported that after thirty hours no agreement had been reached. Judge Booraem ordered the twelve men locked up again and went home. They agreed at 9 o'clock.

Skillman is nearing the three score and ten mark. He has been successful as a horticulturist, and his fruit farm at Belle Meade, near Somerville, it said to be one of the best in the State. Skillman and Lanehart were the closest friends. They walked and talked together, and the little personal affairs of each were related to the other. Lanehart retired from business with a comfortable fortune and many fine real estate holdings several years ago. He was a widower without children, and naturally sought the companionship of a neighbor like Skillman.

In 1905 Lanehart died. Soon after his death his old friend Skillman presented a will written by himself, alleged to have been signed by Lanehart, and duly witnessed by William H. Ely and Jeremiah Skillman, a son of the accused. The will, after making several minor bequests to relatives, provided that the residue of the estate should be divided between Skillman and Laura Kellogg, niece of the testator.

But there was another will, one that Lanehart had made out himself. This had been given to the cashier of the Hopewell Bank for safekeeping, and had never been taken from his hands. It antedated the will written by Skillman. In it Skillman was not mentioned.

The family of Lanehart took their will to the Orphans' Court, and the court accepted it, declaring the Skillman will to be bogus. Chancellor Magie upheld the decision of the Orphans' Court. It was then necessary for Prosecuting Attorney John F. Reger to prosecute Skillman, and he was indicted for forgery a year after Lanehart's death.

In the first trial, after the jury's disagreement, one of the jurors charged that Deputy Sheriff John L. Anderson had approached him with intent to influence his vote. A charge of contempt was made against Anderson, and he was sentenced to ninety days in jail and a fine of $300. An appeal from the sentence is now pending.

The second trial brought out the fact that pencil marks showed under the ink signature of Lanehart's name to the Skillman will. The suggestion was that a tracing had been made of the old man's signature in pencil and then the tracing covered with ink. W. E. Kingsley, a handwriting expert, testified that the signature was not the real signature of Lanehart, and that it was a series of short, patched strokes, as if the signature had been drawn out with care. On the other hand, other signatures of Lanehart showed only two uplifts of the pen. Other experts swore that Lanehart had not signed the Skillman will.

Against the testimony was that of Miss Eva Skillman, daughter of the accused, who said that she saw the old man sign the will first in lead pencil and then laborously follow the lines with pen and ink. His hands were trembling and swollen, she said. Dr. A. B. Mosher, who treated Lanehart for years, testified that he had suffered from angina pectoris, senile debility, and had attacks of acute indigestion. His hands and feet would swell frequently, the physician declared.

In Skillman's defense evidence was brought to show that Lanehart had not much comfort or love for his sisters. Edward Skillman told of a visit the old man made to his (Skillman's) father, when he displayed a letter and exclaimed:

"Now you see why I have cut off my sister. She is constantly raising hell because I am living with Laura. She writes she is coming to visit me soon. If she does, and gets meddlesome, I will kick her out of the house and board her across the street."

Miss Jennie Updyke testified that Lanehart had come to Updyke Mills on business about six months before his death. He was chatting with her on the porch of her home when Skillman passed.

"There goes fried Skillman," she testified Lanehart said to her. "That man is white all the way through. I would trust him more than any man I know. To show you how much I think of him I have lately had him draw up my will, and when I die he will get a good share of my estate."

James N. Duffield, of Hopewell, whose mother is a beneficiary under the Skillman will, also testified that he had heard Lanehart say that his mother, Laura Kellogg, and Skillman would better off when he died.

Aiding the Blind.

Convinced that the conditions of the blind within the State are such as to warrant the attention of its citizens, efforts are now being made to form and incorporate a New Jersey State Association for the Blind. Arrangements have been made to hold a mass meeting in the First Presbyterian church on Broad street, Newark, Thursday night, December 12, to arouse interest and enthusiasm in this movement. Percy W. Cannon, of this city, will be among those who will attend.

Brown Misunderstood the Date.

LeRoy Brown, who was found guilty to stealing a horse and wagon in this city recently, and who failed to appear in court at Elizabeth yesterday for sentence, reported there today and through Chief Kiely stated that he had misunderstood the date, believing that he was expected to appear on Wednesday, December 11. The court continued the bail for Brown until next Wednesday when he will be sentenced.

Goes West to Claim Fortune.

Mrs. Patrick O'Neill, of New Brunswick, left yesterday for California to secure her share of the estate of her brother, Thomas Ambrose, who died recently, leaving a large estate. Mrs. O'Neill is the mother of Patrick O'Neill, of this city, and is quite well known in Plainfield.

Y. W. C. A. Bible Class.

A Bible class in the Gospels will hold its first meeting tonight at the Young Women's Christian Association, 212 East Front street. This class will meet every Thursday evening at 8 o'clock, and all young women will be welcome. There is no charge for attendance.

Coldest Morning of the Season.

Weather Prophet John Neagle announced today that this morning's temperature was the lowest for the winter season. The thermometer tumbled to fifteen degrees.

Their Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Staats are celebrating their wedding anniversary today in New York. In company with a party of friends they enjoyed a matinee performance of a Broadway production this afternoon. After dinner at the Waldorf tonight, the celebrating couple and their friends will occupy boxes at the theatre. Mr. Staats is the genial proprietor of the Hotel Kensington. The attaches of the hostelry presented a silver water pitcher to the couple in honor of the event.

Lecture On the Panama Canal.

Andrew McLean Parker, of West Seventh street, will give an illustrated lecture on the Panama Canal at the morning exercises in the city high school tomorrow. The lecture will be illustrated by stereopticon slides from photographs of the canal in course of construction. Mr. Parker, who is a graduate of the high school, is secretary of the school alumni association and has been employed by the government as civil engineer on the big canal job.

Client Pays Up.

The suit instituted by G. W. V. Moy against Samuel W. Rushmore, which was to have been tried in the district court, today, has been amicably settled. The action was for $300. Mr. Moy has at various times acted as counsel for Mr. Rushmore in matters of litigation.

Felix Parrah on Trial.

The trial of Frank Hancock, employed as a brakeman on the B. & O. Railroad, against Felix Parrah, an Italian of Cranford, on a charge of shooting, was begun in the Union County Court, this morning, and will occupy the whole day.

"FORM NEW COUNTY OF CITY AND ITS SUBURBS"

----BOROUGH MAYOR BEFORE BOARD OF TRADE

Newton B. Smalley in Ginger Talk on Various Local Matters

CONDEMNS BRICK PAVE AND LAUDS MAYOR FISK

President H. W. Marshall Attacks a Councilman and Also Refers to Failure of Citizens to Openly Criticise the Board of Education, Which Will Be Discussed at the Next Regular Meeting.

In his characteristic fashion, Mayor Newton B. Smalley, of North Plainfield, made a lengthy speech at the Board of Trade meeting last night, the feature of which was his advocacy of a new county to be formed with Plainfield, North Plainfield, Scotch Plains, South Plainfield, Dunellen and New Market as component parts. He also dwelt at length on street improvements and other topics concerning the city. There was a large crowd on hand to hear the fighting mayor, whose speech in full follows:

"I have been given the subject 'Roads Leading to Plainfield,' and I wish to say at the outset of my remarks, that I have no intention of diverting from those roads to any great extent. You must understand that I am, myself, just emerging from a long term as a public servant, and it doesn't seem to me just right to go into a neighboring city and criticise at this time those who are serving in the same capacity, and, for that reason, I am going to confine my remarks, to a large extent, to the roads, and some of the matters pertaining to the roads, which lead to the city that we all love.

Many Fault Finders.

"I run across some here and there that would be glad tonight to have me go at your school board, which some claim is a close corporation and has expended an enormous amount of money for school purposes and who think that they should be criticised very severely. I again meet men who would be very glad—and a majority of those I found, would be very glad if I should direct my thoughts to this Plainfield Council that is now governing you; and I might go on and tell you of the defects that exist in your police department which here and there I find people finding fault with; and various departments of your city. But it seems to me it would be more becoming for some city man, more directly interested than I, to take up that subject; and if my remarks tonight are in any way a criticism on your Plainfield government, I want to extend to any citizen of Plainfield the privilege of criticising the government over which I have presided for the last nine years in the adjoining borough. I do not say it is perfect; I think if I should tell you what I do not know, you would be much more interested than in what I am going to tell you. But I do think I know something about the roads. It was a very forcible lesson I learned years ago when a good-sized boy in the line of my business I had occasion to buy a steer out in Green Brook. It is a very funny story, it has never been forgotten by me, and is one of th ereasons why i am in favor of good, wide roads. I happened to get the rope on that steer right, and he turned toward Plainfield when he left the farm, and I want to tell you that the new mode of travelling by automobile I don't think discounted that gait very much. Occasionally as I touched the high spots coming towards the city I was in hopes something might happen that would stop that procession. In that trip I made up my mind if I had a chance I was going to devote some of my life to widening some of the roads, and that was the real cause of Somerset street being widened. (Applause). You never knew that before.

Disadvantageously Located.

"But to take up the question of the roads that lead to Plainfield. Now, which way can you go out of this beautiful city of ours without going out of your own county. If you turn to the south you don't ride five minutes before you are into Middlesex county; if you turn to the west you have to go a little farther but you get into Middlesex county again; if you turn to the north in any of the street you are immediately over into Somerset; and there is only Front and Fifth streets that lead to your own county. As a matter of fact, in any municipality in any county in the State of New Jersey that is located as Plainfield is in Union, and as North Plainfield is in Somerset, they receive the small end of the output so far as expenditures are concerned; and that is one of the things that has a tendency to injure our road conditions at the present date and always has. West Seventh street—the western section of Plainfield today, people living out there, within a stone's throw almost of Plainfield avenue, are compelled to send their children to New Market for their education because they are in Middlesex county.

Borough Unfortunate.

"The whole of North Plainfield has to go to Somerville as their county seat, and look to them for benefits and return for taxes paid. From time to time you citizens of Plainfield have harped about the unfair deal you get in your own county, and, while I am not prepared to show figures what per rata share you get of the expenditures, I am convinced that you are not much better off than we are in Somerset. We in North Plainfield are sending to the county seat some $21,000 or $22,000 for county expenses, and I would like to have any member of this organization tell me to what extent that is expended in North Plainfield.

"The running of the borough government costs something like the same amount. Out of that money we pay for streets, police and fire departments and all other expenses of the borough. This year it has increased a little, but up to this year it has been $21,800 for the whole. That same amount goes to the county seat, and out of that we get a few touches here and there of cracked stone on the small piece of county road we have, and perhaps a culvert and an occasional bridge. I say to you, our return is slight for what is expended for county purposes, and so long as these conditions remain in Plainfield and North Plainfield we are going to have trouble about improving the roads that lead our way.

Compliments Mayor Fisk.

"I want to say before I go further into the subject that, so far as the mayor of Plainfield is concerned, I do not wish any one to get the impression that anything I might have said, or am about to say, reflects in any degree on the present mayor. I look upon him as one of Plainfield's best. There has never been a time during my occupancy of the office that he has not been willing to co-operate and has done everything as a neighboring mayor that a man could do.

"But I have said, and I reiterate it now without fear of contradiction, that during the laying of the present permanent pavement in Plainfield that it has been hard, and is still so, to place the responsibility of the delay upon any one. And that, in my judgment, is caused largely because of the fact that the mayor of the city, while generally looked upon as holding the highest office in the city, is frequently after being elected made to look mighty small because of the fact that he is not a part of your governing body; that he takes no part in the deliberations of the Common Council; and I have seen him myself standing at the door of the ante-room—the most expensive room that the city has ever had: I have seen him standing in that door, with a look of humiliation on his face; and have seen the members of the council passing back and forth; I believe it was because they were passing measures not in accord with his judgment, and the brick pavement and the manner in which its adoption was carried on, is one of them.

"I am going back to the roads that lead to Plainfield for a moment. Those of you who have driven over the Watchung mountain will believe me that that is one of the most beautiful sections in our State, and that efforts to open a wide avenue in that direction must certainly meet the approval of the generations to come. We are here on this earth but a short time and my notion is we ought to be doing something.

SECOND CHURCH CONCERT

Vocal and Instrumental Numbers and Readings at Grace M. E. Church.

TO FORM SOCIAL ASSOCIATION.

With Grace M. E. church filled to its utmost capacity, a most delightful program of musical numbers, both vocal and instrumental, and readings were rendered at the second of the winter's concerts last night and each and every number was enthusiastically received by the appreciative audience, numbering about 400 people. Those who took part were Mrs. Caroline Doll Green, soprano soloist of Old First church, Elizabeth; William N. Searles, Jr., basso cantante, special soloist of St. Paul's M. E. church, of Newark; Otto K. Schill, violinist, Udo Gossweiler, 'cellist; John H. B. Conger, pianist and organist, and Mrs. Elizabeth L. Von Veer, reader.

As the vocalist on the program, Mrs. Green showed remarkable clearness of voice, superiority of technique and accuracy of rendition, which won her encores in her two numbers. The instrumentalists rendered their selections with an excellent consideration of technique, and Mrs. Von Veer, the reader, won genuine applause with her delivery of "The Pudding," her speech on "Women's Suffrage," and her dramatic recitation, "The Boat Race."

All of those who took part in the program are familiar with Plainfielders, except Mr. Gossweiler, who made his first appearance here last night. The program, arranged by Mr. Conger, was as follows:

Trio, Sarabande from Suite, (Rheinberger); Allegro from Suite, organ, violin and cello; "Hold Thou My Hand, (Gounod), Mr. Searles; reading, "The Pudding," Mrs. Von Neer; solo, (a) "Grass and Roses," (Bartlett), (b) "Come to Me My Love," (Baumans), Mrs. Green; cello solo, "Romance," (Bangoen), Mr. Gossweiler; duet, "Calm as the Night," (Gotze), Mrs. Green and Mr. Searles; violin solo, (a) Romance in E Major, (Arthur Foote) (b) Hejre Kati, (Hubay, Mr. Schill; solo, "Omnipotance," (Schubert), Mr. Searles; reading, "The Boat Race," (Murray), Mrs. Von Neer; solo, "Oh Dry Those Tears," (Del Riego), Mrs. Green; trio, Adagio Op. 59, Rondo Op. 59, (De Beriot), piano, violin and cello.

ANNUAL SOCIABLE OF TRINITY'S HOME DEPT.

Under the auspices of the Home Department of Trinity Reformed church Sunday-school, the annual sociable and entertainment was held in the lecture room of the church, last night. The affair was well attended and proved to be a pleasant one for all. The lecture room was attractively decorated with the department colors, orange and white, the arrangement being very effective. These gatherings held once a year afford an opportunity for all the members to meet one another and get better acquainted with the work. The present membership of the department is 192.

An excellent program was presented during the first part of the evening, including an address by Mrs. A. W. Karnell, county superintendent of Home Department work. She gave a most interesting account of the progress of this department of Sunday-school work throughout the county which afforded much encouragement. She congratulated the local department for its activity. A few remarks were also made by F. E. Smith, superintendent of the Sunday-school, in which he complimented the members of the department for their untiring interest in the work. He also spoke words of encouragement.

The rest of the program comprised piano duets by Miss Jeannette Neal and Harold Storr, recitations by Miss Ella Porter, violin and piano selections, Millard McAfee and Harold Storr and vocal solos by Miss Eliza Dufford, accompanied by Miss Anna Boss. All of the numbers were well received. A social hour then followed and refreshments were served by the committee in charge.

The officers and various committees of the department are as follows:

Superintendent, Mrs. Charles E. Ball; secretary, Mrs. Louis M. Dunavan; reception committee, Mrs. Winfield Schomp, chairman; Mrs. G. Q. Dolliver, Mrs. Julius Williams, Mrs. Mary Dunham, Mrs. E. J. Cooley, Mrs. A. L. Force, Mrs. L. C. Sheppard. Entertainment committee, Mrs. Harry Crawford and Mrs. T. R. VanZandt. Decoration committee, Mrs. L. B. VanCamp, Mrs. John H. Whitenack and Mrs. W. F. Leitheusser. Refreshment committee, Mrs. John Ross, chairman; Mrs. A. E. Gunnigan, Mrs. George Dufford and Mrs. Helen Huff.

BUSINESS MEN BANQUET

Members of Y M.C.A. Class at Association Decide to Effect Permanent Organization.

ATTENDANCE VERY LARGE.

Developing the social side of the business men's gymnasium class of the Y. M. C. A., twenty-six members of the class got together last night at the association, and after a banquet early in the evening, decided to form an organization among the members of the class, about fifty in number, for the purpose of letting the members get to know each other better. It is probable that one of the rooms upstairs in the association will be set aside for the use of the business men, and a permanent organization is to be formed, with this room as a club room where the members can meet informally. The class comprises lawyers, doctors and professional men as well as a large percentage of commuters.

With George C. M. Smith as chairman of the banquet, the members sat down early to "feed up" on the collation, provided by Mrs. Henry Johnson as caterer. After the good things had been disposed of, speeches were in ored and the toastmaster introduced City Chairman W. S. Angleman, Councilman Ralph I. Tolles, Dr. Norman Probasco, David Carney, Frank Rowley and Physical Director George Listman, who spoke on the work of the gym class and the benefits derived, working in good stories to add to the genial atmosphere of good fellowship prevailing. Most of the speakers had somethng to say about the benefits they had derived from the class, which has now been formed for about seven years. They spoke of the ability to do better work as a result of the physical exercise on the gymnasium floor and all agreed that membership in the department was proving a profitable investment. After the remarks of these speakers, there were general remarks by several of the diners.

The diners then went into informal executive session and the strong feeling for organization among the members of the class. Organization was decided upon and a committee of five appointed to look up new members and keep in touch with those already in the class. This committee will make an effort to look up the absentees, reporting cases of sickness among the members and arranging for visits to those members of the class unable to get out, with a view to strengthening the social side of the class. The committee consists of Councilman Ralph I. Tolles, chairman; Harry Runyon Dr. Frank Clawson, Dr. Norman H. Probasco and Frank O. Dunning. Physical Director Listman will be an ex-officio member.

It was decided to hold another banquet and reception early in the spring, and informal meetings from time to time in the members room, if arrangements can be completed with Secretary Kenneth Robbie to secure the use of a room in the association building. The class meets for physical work Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings.

BOARD OF TRADE HEARS ELETCRIC LIGHTING FACTS

F. E. Kinsman, at the Board of Trade meeting last night, discussed the question of the city's electric light service and asserted that a contract for one year should be made and not for five as has been advocated.

The taxpayers, he said, are paying too high a rate for the service given and they should not be bound for so long a term as five years in the event of a remedy being found. From year to year, he declared, was plenty well enough and when c onsolidation came about, the borough would get the benefit of another rate.

"Past experiences show," he said, "that courtesies from the electric light people cease after contracts are made and are not renewed until it is time for another one. The city has not been getting what it has been paying for and the people ought to get a rebate in some way. The rate to us now is $15.50 for 24 c. p. and a fair price would not be far above $10.50 per light."

By a unanimous vote, the Board will recommend to the council that only a one year contract be made.

In routine business, the dinner committee reported progress and F. C. Harder, E. C. Deal and L. Spricer were elected members. The subscription committee appointed to secure funds for special publicity of the city reported $940 subscribed and $610 collected. The committee was discharged and a new one was appointed to try and hustle up the delinquents.

DRUGGIST A DEFENDANT

Postmaster P. W. Brakeley of Dunellen Accused of Selling Illegal Mixture of Iodine.

LIABLE TO FIFTY DOLLAR FINE.

Charged with selling tincture of iodine which contained no potassium iodine, Dr. Peter W. Brakeley, postmaster of Dunellen and druggist and practising physician there for thirty-eight years, appeared before Vice Chancellor Howell, at the district court in New Brunswick on charges preferred by the State Board of Health, which has recently been conducting an iodine investigation to determine if it is up to the formula in the revised United States Pharmacepoeia. Four other druggists from Middlesex county were brought up in the same charge.

A fine of $50 was imposed by Lawyer Stryker, of Trenton, who represents Attorney-General McCarter in the prosecution, but the Dunellen druggist will contest the case in court, for he claims that the drug he is charged with adulterating is made under the formula of the drug manual. The case will come up again December 19.

In speaking to the court as defendant of the case, Dr. Brakeley said: "I have been a law-abiding citizen of this State for sixty-five years, thirty-eight of which I have been a practising physician, and during this time I have been selling tincture of iodine which was strictly in accordance with the requirements of the law. I have the formula adopted from 1870 to 1900 and the iodine which I sold was according to the formula which was then legal. The druggists and physicians have had no notice of any change in that law. I have simply sold what was legal for thirty-five years, and now you claim it is illegal. I am not going to pay this fine of $50, but I will contest the case."

The law on the subject of iodine is said to be very explicit and fixes a certain standard for the drug, providing that all tincture of iodine shall contain five grains of potassium in 100 cubic centimetres. It went into effect March 29, 1904.

YOUNG MACHINIST DROPS DEAD IN SHOP

Stricken with heart trouble while engaged in his work at the Pond shop shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, William F. Lawlor, of West Third stree, dropped dead beside his machine. He was seen to topple by machinists near him and hurry calls were sent for Dr. A. K. Brennan and Father Bogan. Both arrived in a short time but they could render no service.

Lawlor was in his twenty-third year and was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Lawlor, of John street. He had been ill at short intervals several times recently and only two weeks ago was in Muhlenberg Hospital because of an attack of nervous trouble, brought on by a stomach complaint and participation in a football game. He left the institution and returned to work against the advice of his physician.

The young man was a member of St. Mary's church and was well known in the West End where he had lived all his life. He leaves a wife, who was Miss Irene Dixon, and an eight-months-old son. Beside his parents he is also survived by two sisters, the Misses Margaret and Nellie Lawlor, and two brothers, John and Michael Lawlor, all of this city.

The funeral will be held in St. Mary's church Monday morning and burial will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

Scarcity of Cement in the City.

Because there has been so much cement used in connection with the brick pavement work in the city, City Engineer Gavett was confronted with a new problem yesterday. When Contractor Meeker got ready to grout the pavement at Front and Somerset streets, he learned that he only had about ten bags of cement and that the supply in the city was practically exhausted. There was scarcely enough to finish the grouting at the corner and hurry up orders for another supply was given at once. The pavement on East Front street is now open for traffic and the sides of the thoroughfare are being repaired for the winter months.

WEST END HAS MAN HUNT

Pal of "Dutch" Ides Rounded Up After a Lively Chase in this City.

HELPED COMMIT BOLD ROBBERY

Following an exciting chase in which nearly a hundred West End people took part, James Lindner, a member of the "Dutch" Ides gang and wanted by the Elizabeth police for a burglary committed six weeks ago, was captured on Stebbins place at 5 o'clock last night, having been one of four young toughs who held up and robbed a Bound Brook man on a Lehigh Valley freight train. Lindner was caught by Vanderhoof, of Highland avenue, as he was in the act of climbing over a back fence in his effort to get away. He was held until Detective-Sergeant John Flynn arrived in the police patrol and took him in charge. He at first refused to give the police any information about himself or his crime but this morning confessed everything excepting the names of his pals after Detective Ward, of Elizabeth, had identified him.

According to Lindner's story, he and his companions were riding on the Valley train and when passing near Cranford it was boarded by Joseph Kovact, of Bound Brook, who wanted to beat his way home. He displayed a gold watch and the gang determined to get it. While the train was in motion they held him up at the point of revolvers and took the time-piece and also $60 which they found in a pocket.

The quartette decided to jump off at Samptown and proceed into Plainfield but when they alighted Kovact followed them. He continued a few paces behind down Clinton avenue and meeting John Wilson, told them what had occurred and asked his help. Wilson joined in the follow-up and at Eighth street and Clinton avenue they encountered Edward Vanderhoof, of Highland avenue, who was driving in a runabout. The story was told again and Vanderhoof tendered the use of his rig to continue the chase.

Wilson got in with him while Kovact proceeded on foot, informing everyone he passed of the hold-up and asking them to join in. The crowd soon grew to a dozen and several attempts were made to surround the quartette but the display of revolvers caused a loss of courage. At Fifth street and Monroe avenue, the highwaymen separated, two striking out for Fourth street while the others ran down West Fifth street. Wilson and Vanderhoof went after the latter, leaving the others to the crowd, which had suddenly swelled to large proportions by the addition of numerous men on the way from the Pond shop.

The original pursuers abandoned their rig when their quarry started out and a merry chase was taken up. All the time new recruits were joining in and by the time the robbers had gotten down Prescott place, 100 yelling men were in their rear. They suddenly determined to take to the back yards and were climbing over a fence when Vanderhoof captured Lindner. His companion disappeared behind a chicken coop and though the entire neighborhood was searched, he could not be located. The other two got away from the crowd in the Fourth street woods.

Kovact went to police headquarters in the patrol wagon but did not give his story at first, gaining the impression that if he told he was riding on the train he would be arrested. He promised to be in court this morning but did not show up. Lindner will be sent to Elizabeth and the police of that city will figure out whether the hold-up is to take precedence over the burglar charge against him.

Late last evening, residents of the West End rounded up John Poller, a vagrant, who happened to wander in a store in search of something to eat and who was taken for one of the gang. A crowd surrounded him at Third and Stebbins place and held him until the police could be called. He afterward proved that he had nothing to do with the railroad affair through the arrival of two colored companions who went to headquarters in quest of a night's lodging. They were arraigned before Judge Runyon this morning and given the usual time limit in which to get out of town.

Matinee for Children Tomorrow.

The fair under the auspices of John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, continues in Co. K armory and is being liberally patronized. Tomorrow afternoon there will be a matinee and all children will be admitted free. Tonight there will be special music and moving pictures. The fair will close tomorrow night with many features, including a new program of moving pictures. The suit of clothes, pair of shoes and picture, all of which were donated, will be disposed of before the windup of the fair.

URGES THAT CITY BUY THE SMALLEY BUILDING

President of Board of Trade Gives Facts and Figures to Prove it a Wise Investment for City Hall.

Under the head of new business and discussions for the general welfare of the city at the Board of Trade meeting, last night, President H. W. Marshall took up the subject of a new police station for Plainfield and in his characteristic straight-from-the-shoulder style, quoted facts and figures to show that the taxpayers could be best served by the purchase of the Smalley building on North avenue, now owned by Woolston & Buckle. Mr. Marshall declared that he was speaking for no person or persons in advocating the move and that he had reached the conclusion only after considering the matter from every side. In the course of his explanation he said:

"The lease on the present city police station expires on June 1 next, and I understand that a number of sites have been offered for the erection of a new building; one at Second street and Central avenue, one on Watchung avenue in a part of the Friends' property and another on Watchung avenue, near Second street. The present station occupies two floors. On the first is a court room forty by seventeen feet and a rear room thirty by seventeen holding six steel cells. Upstairs is a dormitory with four single beds and the chief's private office.

"Some time ago, the Smalley building was offered to the city but the councilmen did not see fit to buy it. They ought to now, as the store occupied by the Smalley market is just as large as the city offices opposite and can be easily changed into headquarters for the police, while in the rear of the building is ample space for the erection of a stable wherein the patrol wagon and ambulance could be kept. Now, in my investigation of rentals, etc., I have compiled the following figures:

"Rent paid by the city at present for offices in the Smalley building, $1,860 per year; janitor, $420; total, $2,280. The building can be purchased for $38,000 and a careful estimate shows that the alterations needed to accommodate the police and the erection of a stable would cost $2,000 more, making a total of $40,000. Interest on $40,000 worth of bonds would total $1,800, water and fuel would be $250 and janitor $600; total, $2,650.

"To build a new station on a new site and equip it properly would cost $20,000 at least. Interest on this amount of bonds would be $900, and heat, water and lights would reach $200. Add to this what the city is paying for the Smalley building now and its janitor and we have a total of $3,380 a year as against $2,650 if the building became the property of the city. Beside this, the police station and other offices would be separated from each other and cause much inconvenience."

Mr. Marshall's statement and figures led to a general discussion and the concensus of opinion was that the city would be benefitted if the building were purchased. No formal action was taken but the proposition will be followed up.

Street Pavement Work Stopped.

The councilmanic street committee has decided to stop the brick pavement work and nothing further will be done until spring. This morning City Engineer Gavett put his men to work filling in between the west bound trolley tracks on West Front street, with stone and the street will be put in condition for general traffic. The brick now standing on the streets about the city will be removed to a place of storage for the winter.

Talked About the Panama Canal.

Illustrating his talk on the Panama Canal by a series of over a hundred stereopticon slides, Andrew McLean Parker gave an interesting lecture before the city high school pupils in the school auditorium this morning.

Harriett Cross Hoff.

Harriett Cross Hoff, widow of Isaac Hoff, died at her home on Franklin place, last night. She was in her seventy-fourth year. The funeral will be held at the late residence tomorrow afternoon at 3:30.

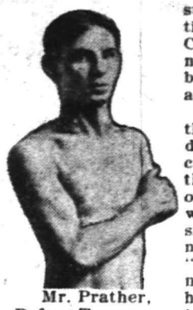
A MARVELOUSLY QUICK CURE OF TUBERCULOSIS!

Tubercolosis, or consumption, as it is more commonly known, has well been called the "White Plague," on account of the large number of victims it claims every year. A few years ago conditions were such that the poor unfortunate who became afflicted with this dread disease must calmly and resignedly await the end. Today it is different. Even in this disease, while there is life there is hope, and now no matter to what stage the disease has progressed, the patient can be cured. Also it is not necessary for him to seek those states known as the "consumptive retreat" as New Mexico, Colorado, Arizona, or California—as the new treatment can be taken either at home or at a sanatorium near by.



Mr. Prather, Before Treatment.

Mr. Prather After Treatment.

Physical Culture, in all the name implies, is the foundation and fact of the new cure. Mr. Bernarr Macfadden, the founder and chief exponent of Physical Culture methods, who is to lecture at The Casina on the evening of Wednesday, December 11th, on "Physical Culture," will have much to say in his lecture on his positive cure of tuberculosis and other so-called incurable diseases. Mr. Macfadden conducts four sanatoriums—two at Battle Creek, Mich., and two at Physical Culture City, N. J., where patients are received for treatment and where some very wonderful cures have been brought about.

One of the most remakarble cures in Mr. Macfadden's experience was that of Mr. S. W. Prather, of Wilmington, Del., whose photographs, before and after treatment are reproduced herewith. Mr. Prather came to him suffering from tubercolosis of the lungs and an aggravated case of chronic constipation. That he should have been relieved of both of these conditions by his method of treatment is not surprising, but that so much should have been accomplished in the very short time of eight weeks is worthy of special comment.

A loss or gain in weight means everything to a consumptive patient, and Mr. Prather gained seventeen pounds in this brief period. It must be remembered also that this was not merely a forced gain of so much fat, but it represented the addition of that much muscle and other good sound tissue in his lungs and all other parts of his body. He was in excellent health, with both his ailments completely cured, when he returned home, after eight weeks at the sanatorium. Mr. Macfadden could not promise results as speedily as this in all instances, but Mr. Prather's case certainly demonstrates the value and effectiveness of Mr. Macfadden's methods.

Mr. Prather attended one of the sanatoriums at Physical Culture City, N. J. Hundreds of others are receiving the same benefits at the other sanatoriums and at home. Mr. Macfadden's mailing treatment is for those who from business or other reasons cannot visit the sanatoriums.

Mr. Macfadden will gladly give a free diagnosis of every case brought to his attention. He can be seen for a short time at his hotel in the city, either before or after his lecture. By all means you should hear the lecture. If you are ailing you should have a diagnosis of your case. If you fail to see him personally when he is in town on the day of the lecture, write him at his main office, Flat Iron Building, New York city.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

The shops of the Aluminum Plate and Press Company, of West Dunellen, will resume work in a day or two with a force of fifteen men. This notice was given out by the company yesterday and it was further stated that the company would increase the force of men later. The shop shut down about two weeks ago when the company failed, but work is to be resumed again and the unfinished jobs will be completed by the small force of men. About a score of Dunellenites were employed at the shops before they shut down, but as it is reported that the company is on its feet again, it is probable that the men will be taken on again. Some of the men employed at the shops from here have secured work elsewhere, but the majority of them are still out of work, or only temporarily employed.

Five members of the park gang of local workmen employed by the railroad have been laid off. The men were employed to keep the station lawns and walks in shape and worked as a general repair gang for the section. As a general thing, but two or three are laid off each winter, the others being retained to shovel snow from the station and at the grade crossings.

The fair to be given under the auspices of Sunshine Guild of Holy Innocents church will open tonight in Friendship Hall, New Market. The various committees of the guild have worked hard in preparation for the affair, and various booths, tastefully decorated, have been erected at the hall. The fair will conclude tomorrow evening.

Tax Collector La Rue will be at Charles S. Day's office Tuesday morning from 10 to 12 o'clock, for the purpose of receiving borough taxes.

Yesterday morning was the coldest of the season, the thermometer registering 12 degrees at about dawn.

WESTFIELD.

Westfield high school has been designated by the State Board of Education as one of the schools where the pupils of the State Normal School are to do observation work. The teacher under whom they are placed will receive extra pay, at the rate of $35 per month.

Eugene W. Chamberlain, a local contractor, has been awarded a contract for constructing the North avenue sewer, in Westfield, to the Garwood borough line.

Westfield's assessment commission will go out of office on January 1, and the place of the commission will be taken by the elected Board of Assessors.

It is estimated that the proposed eight-room addition to the Walnut street school building will cost the taxpayers $46,000.

The property owners of Dudley avenue, Westfield, have petitioned the council to give them sewer accommodations.

UPSETTING LAMP WIPES OUT HIS ENTIRE FAMILY

Mrs. Sidney Dix, the wife of Sidney Dix, a foreman of linemen for the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, died Wednesday night of burns she received two weeks ago at her home, 692 Franklin street, Elizabeth. As she was preparing breakfast her 2-year-old boy crawled on the table and upset the lamp, which exploded, enveloping him in flames.

Mrs. Dix was badly burned in trying to save her child. Dix was asleep at the time, but awakened by their screams, jumped out of bed, and went to their help. In smothering the flames he had his hands badly burned.

The mother and her son were removed to the Elizabeth General Hospital, and the latter died a few days later. A girl was born to Mrs. Dix after she was injured, but died, and with the death of his wife Wednesday night Dix sees his entire family wiped out.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

George M. Cohan's "The Honeymooners," which comes to the New Plainfield theatre tomorrow afternoon and night, has been playing all summer long at the New Amsterdam theatre, New York, at $2 prices. It would be playing there still did not previous bookings force it upon the road. After the present road tour "The Honeymooners" returns to the New Amsterdam for a long spring engagement. Of all the Cohan song shows "The Honeymooners" has proven the most successful and the best supported. It has cleared a fortune for the young author and placed his great reputation upon firm ground.

From the beginning to end, Lyman H. Howe's new program of moving pictures to be seen at the New Plainfield theatre next Thursday night, is of the widest possible variety. It is this which makes it so interesting alike to young and old, rich or poor, wise or "otherwise." Mr. Howe has always been a past master in the act of transferring distant scenes to his audiences. In his new program he excels his own efforts in the past. How alien land look, how their people live, dress, work, play, and a thousand other things of absorbing human interest, make his new program so valuable that no one who wishes to be well informed and keep abreast with the world's progress, can afford to miss it. There are really no words that can describe its value adequately.

Preparing for Christmas Exercises. Members of the senior class of the borough high school are busy rehearsing for a play to be given at the Christmas exercises of the school Thursday evening, December 19. The exercises will be held in the high school assembly hall in the evening, at which time "roasts" will be given on the junior class, in accordance with an annual custom of the school.

DEATH CHAIR TEST TO BE MADE MONDAY.

Sometime between now and the time for the execution of Saverio Di Giovanni, the first victim to pay the death penalty in the electric chair in this State, the Adams Electrical Company, which installed the electrical apparatus at the State prison in Trenton, will make a number of tests in order that there may be no bungling affair of the executions which are to take place.

The company's employes have made a number of tests already, but they were of the various connections. They were of low voltage. The final test will be made about Monday. This will be an electrical test determined by incandescent light and measured by meters. Although instantaneous, the voltages of the tests will show at once so that the executioner may be able to determine whether the switch board and other parts of the death-dealing machinery are intact or not.

Because Walter Camp has referred to the fact that the present football rules encourage indiscriminate use of the forward pass the conclusion has been drawn by some persons that he favors abolishing this play altogether. There is nothing in what Camp said to justify such a conclusion. The point he brings out is that the present rules, in providing a distance penalty on the first and second downs for an uncompleted forward pass, promote haphazard trust to luck use of the play. Camp has not said that he was opposed to restoring the 1906 rule, which provided loss of the ball for an incomplete forward pass, no matter on what down. The latter condition is what a few experts want to see restored, thus providing a more equitable penalty in case the forward pass failed to work, at the same time encouraging skill and strategy in its use as distinguished from recklessness.

Robert J. Whelan, quarterback on the collegiate squad, at Hamilton, has been elected captain of the football team for 1908. H. J. York has been chosen chairman of the sophomore committee.

Maurice A. Hammond, of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., was elected captain of the Wesleyan football team for next season at a meeting of the team held this week.

Ray Van Orman, Cornell's right end, who was discharged from the University of Pennsylvania Hospital last Saturday, where he had been treated for concussion of the brain since the Thanksgiving Day game, was taken to the Cornell infirmary this week in a serious condition. He had suffered a relapse. It was said yesterday that his chances for recovery were good. Van Orman was badly hurt by a kick in the head in the Princeton game. He was carried off the field in the West Point game, but after two weeks rest was started against Pennsylvania. For the third time his head was injured and concussion of the brain followed

BASEBALL.

The New York Nationals have arranged an exhibition game with the Yale varsity baseball team, to be played at the Polo Grounds on April 11, right after the return of the New Yorks from their Southern training trip. Tad Jones, the star quarterback, is captain and catcher of the Yale nine. Princeton wants a game with the New Yorks, to be played at Princeton, and if possible the Tigers will be accommodated. The New Yorks will train at Marlin Springs, Tex., and among the games to be played on their way back, which schedule is not yet completed, will be one in Little Rock on April 6. Requests from Southern teams for dates are coming in freely to Secretary Knowles, and there is nothing to indicate a boycott of the New Yorks in Dixie.

The team will start South about March 1. There will be in the party headed by McGraw a number of new players, drafted or purchased, who have not yet played with the team. They include James, catcher, from the Washington, Pa., club of the K. O. M. League, a football player and said to be a hard hitter; O'Brien, an outfielder from the same club; Crandall, a pitcher from the Cedar Rapids Club of the Three I League; Herzog, a third baseman from the Reading Club of the Interstate League; Beecher, pitcher, Springfield, Three I League; Evans, first baseman, Fairmount, W. Va., Western Pennsylvania League; Early, outfielder, Franklin, Pa.; Malarkey, pitcher, Ohio-Pennsylvania League; De Vore, outfielder, Cotton States League; Sundheim, infielder, Houghton, Mich., and Pfyhl, infielder, Cedar Rapids.

Other new men will be Merkle, the first baseman, who joined the New Yorks in the latter part of last season, and McDonald, the third baseman, who was turned over to Newark last season. According to McGraw's present plans the outfield for next season will be made up of Shannon in left, Seymour in centre and Donlin in right. The West Point cadets are after Christy Mathewson to coach their team next spring.

Three Basketball Games.

The Y. M. C. A. basketball five will play the team from the Twenty-sixth ward branch of the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A. in the local gymnasium Monday night. The visitors' five will line up as follows: Kappes and Kramer, forwards; Little, centre; Howard and Hurd, guards. The game has been but recently arranged in place of the unavoidable cancellation by this team last Saturday night. Two games in the local league will be played the same night, Baptist church vs. Senior five, and Leaders' five vs. Congregational church team. The play will begin at 7:45 to allow for the three games.

Physical Director George L. Listman, of the local Y. M. C. A., has arranged for a dual track meet with the Twenty-third street branch of the Y. M. C. A. of New York. The meet will be held in the Orange gymnasium January 15.

Too Little Civic Interest.

"As a matter of fact, men are very slow to get into public affairs. I believe we could pick out of Plainfield today several hundred men who could quote you prices on worthless stock that has been issued in the last ten years who could not tell you the names of ten Councilmen who have served the city in the past twenty years, and yet they are living here every night. Occasionally one of them gets into the council and is looked upon as a statesman, but he comes far from being one. (Applause.) I mean by that, that men generally do not take any interest in public affairs. I do not just understand it, but it is true; and if this Board of Trade could stir them up in some way to make them realize the importance of that, we would get men into the council I believe who would have more individuality.

"Some few weeks ago I attended a gathering in Washington Valley for the purpose of stirring up the people living along the road from Watchung to Warrenville in the hope that out of that meeting might come a road that by adding to its width from the borough line to Watchung we would have an opportunity of getting out of Plainfield in the direction of Bernardsville and have a road there that would be comfortable for every one to use. And in my talk at that meeting I said, 'Draw your petition for a road 75 feet in width, go to the Board of Freeholders and demand it, and don't accept anything else, and after it is built you will all be proud of it and you will have done something, not only to enhance the value of your own property, but it will be a credit to you as long as you live. It would be the best money spent, in my judgment, for Plainfield and North Plainfield to combine today and open an avenue fixe miles in that direction just as wide as it is possible to make it in reason. I believe it would be a money-maker. And that is one of the roads that leads t oPlainfield.

"Now I believe the same would apply to East Front if we proposed to widen that street to Scotch Plains, that would permit a road wide enough for any automobile and at the same time the man in the carriage leads to Plainfield.

Wider Roads Needed.

"A great agitation is going on around the State about the automobile laws. I spoke to Senator Frelinghuysen about that bill, and I said, it is my judgment that 'you have not struck the keynote, that you have not reached the real friction between the farmer and the owner of the automobile.' Now, to my mind, the owner of the automobile is one of our best citizens. I do not think for New Jersey to pass laws against him would be wise at any stage of the game. Somerset county through its freeholders in the past ten years has built some forty-one miles of twelve-foot macadam road. Just think of it! I had occasion to pass over many of those roads recently in an automobile. Every man almost we met on those narrow roa is was compelled to get out of his wagon and take his horse by the head and let us go by. This is an absurd condition. It will remain so as long as the road remains that width. And to that reason I attribute a large part of the friction between the automobile owners and those who object to their running on the roads. The fact is that the men who have the public money to spend have not built roads in keeping with the conditions that exist today. And it is high time they take up that subject. In my judgment it would be money well spent to build less and have them the proper width, and then they would be safe. It would do away with a lot of the objection to automobiles running through the country.

"It will be necessary, gentlemen, for me to make some reference to my own business in discussing the roads, but I am free to say that I am not here to boost any one's business nor drag it down; and while I am interested in road building, I have always tried to fit myself to conditions, and if there was any material on the face of the earth better than what can be produced in Plainfield I would be glad to see it. Plainfield has a reputation for its good roads. You all know that, there is no dispute on the subject. Now the reason for that is, that the material used on those roads must be pretty nearly right, regardless of the fact that I am interested in crushed stone, you will all admit, I believe, it is a good material to build roads with.

"In France where good roads abounds and the reputation of their roads is known all over the world, they build them out of that material. While I don't believe it is as good as we have here, they are more careful in building of them and they get better results.

Trap Rock Plentiful.

"I stated, gentlemen, Plainfield has the reputation of having good roads, and they are built out of trap-rock, and this city and the borough of North Plainfield lie right under the shadow of hills of the best trap-rock on the face of the globe, and that is the reason our roads are good. We have been enabled out of the public moneys here to spend enough to build macadam roads all over this city, and I guess all of you know what Charley Hand thinks of macadam roads (applause), after his reading about the golden streets. (Applause.)

"We have some one hundred miles of macadam roads in Plainfield and North Plainfield, and they are in fairly good shape. Now I do not think it is wise to take up much of your time about roads leading to Plainfield, so long as the present condition exists about your roads within Plainfield. It seems to me that a lot of the members of the Board want to know something about that. Personally I prefer to talk about the roads leading to Plainfield because that is my subject, and I do not want to divert too much. But I am going to say something later what I think would be the remedy to the roads that lead to Plainfield, and I hope out of the talk and the meetings that will be held later, some good may come from it. We never know what might happen if we start something good going. But in the discussion of your local conditions here, I think I know perhaps a little something, and what little I do know I am willing to tell you.

History of Brick Pave.

The Common Council of the city of Plainfield, by the sanction of the Board of Trade, passed an ordinance for the laying of brick pavement, and they are still at it. Now that covered the whole of the business section of Plainfield, and they determined, too, all at one time, to make that improvement. Without giving the Public Service people any previous notice, they passed a resolution that Park and Watchung avenues should be paved with brick. At the same time they passed an ordinance relating to other streets. They went on to Front street and dug up as good pavement as most cities have and virtually destroyed it as they were compelled to do because of the adoption of brick pavement.

"They issued bonds to the amount of about $40,000 for the payment of that work. The interest on those bonds—the life of them is about ten years, some extending over that time, some less—amounts to a great deal of money. I am ready to say that I believe that a pavement equally as good as brick could have been laid covering the same territory, made of material just as good if not better, if the Council had agreed to take the time to learn more about pavements than they knew, although I admit most of them thought they knew it all. I believe that a pavement just as good could have been laid, and at the expiration of ten years the city, instead of having to pay $40,000 in bonds would have its pavement free of debt. Those $40,0000 of bonds will be there looking for payment, and I think that is one of the greatest mistakles made this year in the Council of the city of Plainfield; and if any such mistake had been made in the borough I would be glad to have it criticised; and I say now, any man who serves the public ought to be glad of criticism and if he won't stand it there is something wrong with him, because we are all human and we make mistakes and we are far from perfect. Therefore we ought to stand the 'gaff' when it is due us.

Some ten or twelve years ago I went to Col. John F. Wilson, one of the best mayors North Plainfield ever had, and I said to him: 'Accept this Democratic nomination, there is something wrong in the Republican party, some man like you is required to straighten it out.' Mr. Wilson said if he took the nomination he would go up and down every street with a club. In connection with his administration I want to say, he did straighten out the finances of that borough and today they compare favorably with any borough in the State regardless of the fact I have served as mayor since his time.

Brick Pave Expensive.

"I made a conservative estimate of what it has cost the business men of Plainfield during the installation of brick pavement, and I say to you that the brick pavement now belongs to them instead of the city, if it went to the actual owners.

"In connection with the laying of brick pavement there is a lot of work; it is laid in courses; the foundation must be prepared; concrete is laid on the bed, the sand is spread on the concrete; and, if I remember correctly, during discussion of the Board of Trade there were arguments used here that there were ways of laying brick that after it was laid it wouldn't make any noise. Apparently they didn't lay it that way.

"There is a lot of work attached to the laying of brick and it takes time to install it. Regardless of what is hindering the laying of them on Front street and Watchung avenue, it takes a long time; it has to set, and the laying of the brick takes special time, and it is causing the merchants of Plainfield a lot of money to have this great public improvement done.

As to Home Trade.

In connection with that, I have set here at different times in these board meetings and listened to arguments about why Plainfield should spend its money at home. It sounded good, and yet out of that appropriation of $40,000 which your Council has issued in bonds, $19,000 of it goes right over into Pennsylvania to the brick men. I do not think any of that returns and does Plainfield a particle of good. That is a part of it I do not like. Some of you will say, perhaps, that is the part that hits me, but whether it does or not, it doesn't help any other Plainfielder. Now I am stuck on this town, and I believe in standing for it in all things that are right, and, as citizens, I think we ought to oppose all things that are wrong, and I think perhaps there are many things about North Plainfield government and Plainfield as well, that could be improved.

More Power for Mayor.

"Now, gentlemen, I have taken up perhaps almost as much of your time as I should. I intend to talk on some subjects I haven't mentioned. I had prepared several different speeches, all of which I destroyed. If I were to offer a remedy for present conditions I would say, first, pertaining to city matters, that some change should be made either in the charter or somewhere else that would give the mayor of the city of Plainfield greater authority. I believe that he should be a part of your governing body, and that his views should be heard in their council. I believe that holding the highest office in the gift of the people, the responsibility of that office should go with him, and then you would be likely to select men qualified to fill that position. There are thousands of times during a man's holding that office where he is glad to say 'yes,' there are hundreds of times when he must say 'No,' and there are occasional times when he feels like saying 'Damn,' and he should have the power that goes with it, and then be held responsible for the various departments and he would not allow such things as exist in Front street today to happen; he would have the power.

"I see that there is an intention of deserting the laying of brick pavement now until spring. I do not know what remedy the merchants along Front street will have where the pavement is unfinished, but if I had authority I think I can say in confidence that a remedy would be found. I believe there is a way to lay that concrete regardless of weather conditions, and lay those brick and get them in place and get them out of the way, with the men who are trying to make a living. I believe it is in the power of the city council to do it, not next spring, but now, and think they ought to do it.

For a New County.

"Go in any direction you like from Plainfield and you will find a road that needs improving. I don't care where it is. Park avenue, West and East Front streets, and on the upper end of Somerset street, they all need it for the generations to come and for conditions that exist today should be improved. And this Board of Trade could do a lot toward it if they will only center their strength, and after preaching annexation, listening to arguments on consolidation, and discussing the various remedies offered as to what should be this organization were to advocate the making of a new county for Plainfield it could be brought about. (Applause.)

"If I were to have my way I would go out for enough to the east, and I would go to the south, the west and the north and take in all that section around the centre of Plainfield's proposed city hall, and I would go to men in all those sections and bring them under one banner, and call that a new county, and have a bill drawn and go to the Legislature and say to that body, that Plainfield and North Plainfield, Dunellen and Scotch Plains, South Plainfield and various towns that might be mentioned are now located at the extreme ends of their county, that they have grown and thrived and their interests have been diverted, and they want you to change this county line. You are continually changing the laws, why can't you change the county line? I say this Board of Trade has power within it to gather around it an association so strong and the arguments would be so reasonable and fair to the Legislature that a bill of that character would be passed and questions which interest us would thereby be settled.

"What was Plainfield's situation when they located their sewer system? The moment they attempted to go outside of their own municipality they had to go out of the county; they had to locate it within her borders. And what is the condition in North Plainfield—wanting sewers and no place to go, unless to go to Plainfield and participate in their plant, which I think is an infernal nuisance at present to those living around them.

New County the Solution.

"A new county would open the way. It would justify building a city hall. A new county would give us our money within our own borders to spend, and we would receive the benefits, and it would solve the problem of both Plainfield and North Plainfield.

"Gentlemen, I could talk to you for a long time about matters in Plainfield, but, as I said before, it don't occur to me it is hardly my place. I would be glad to sit in the audience here and listen to some Plainfield man better qualified.

"I want you, gentlemen, as members of the Board of Trade, and those of you who are not, to become interested if you can in that subject of a new county. It is a solution that I believe could be carried to a final issue if we should cling together on it; and that is one of the points I want to make tonight. I do not know that I have cleared your minds on anything regarding permanent pavement, but I do say that the present conditions, so far as the business men are concerned, is a shame, and the remedy should come swift, and from the right source.

"Gentlemen, I thank you sincerely for your attention." (Applause.)

F. H. Smith Replies.

As the mayor concluded his address, the meeting was thrown open for remarks and Frank H. Smith, county register of deeds and chairman of the Union County Republican Committee, was the first to take the floor. He took exception to the speaker's criticism of the council for selecting brick for paving, stating that he was secretary of the Board of Trade when it passed a resolution advocating this form of roadway. All public men, he said, should invite criticism but it ought to be just.

The Board of Education.

President Marshall stated that it was customary for men to discuss public faults to one another but as a rule no one ever went to the right parties.

"I'll guarantee," he continued, "that I can pick out fifteen men in this gathering who have spoken to me about the star chamber proceedings of the Board of Education but none of them will come out in the open and take a decided stand. Our fellow member, Mr. Force, is a hero in my opinion, for the manner in which he went after the dirt piles in front of his store. He didn't wait to criticise or kick—he just got busy single-handed and was preparing to throw the accumulation in the street when the proper people decided it was time to act. We've got to get together and not let one man do all the work and be the goat."

Strikes a Councilman.

Continuing further Mr. Marshall said that there were men in the council who lacked individuality and who were put there simply by a preponderance of votes and not because of especial fitness. He then told of a city father now serving who came to him and asked that he be nominated as councilman from his ward on the Democratic ticket. He said he was in accord with the policy of the party and wished to help bring about some needed reforms. He was placed on the ticket but failed to get elected. The next year Mr. Marshall said the same man went to the Republicans and made the same request. He was given the nomination and was made a councilman, an office he still holds.

MAYOR SMALLEY'S SPEECH

"And I guess it isn't necessary for me to name the man," was the president's closing remark.

L. B. Woolston's Ideas.

L. B. Woolston also spoke on city problems in a general way and later President Marshall again contributed some remarks. He spoke of the double-tracking on East Front street and the agreement between the officials of the road and Mayor Fink that new cars would be placed on local lines in return for the privileges.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "we have no agreement and if the officials refuse to give us the cars we've got nothing in writing to compel them to make good."

He also expressed his belief that no man should be in the council who is not a property owner. When the councilmen are property owners, he said, they think twice before spending money.

Board of Education Next.

At the close of the meeting it was decided at the regular January session, the methods of the Plainfield Board of Education would be discussed.

FAITH CHAPEL'S FLOCK HAS THREE DAYS' FAIR.

Under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of Faith chapel, and assisted by other members, a three-days' fair was opened yesterday afternoon in the Sterling building, on Park avenue. The women have worked faithfully in arranging the fair and a number of very attractive booths are to be found. Mrs. Valentine Utzinger is the chairman of the various committees, while Mrs. J. W. Musson, as president of the society, and Mrs. L. W. Randolph, as well as the other women have assisted to a great extent in perfecting details.

The booths and those in charge are as follows:

Candy—Mrs. John Mackey, Mrs. Elizabeth Peck, Mrs. George Viebrock, Mrs. Henry Viebrock, Miss Anna Mackey and Miss Bertha Peck; fancy—Mrs. Edward Baker, Mrs. Clarence Murphy, Mrs. J. W. Musson and Mrs. L. W. Randolph; cake—Mrs. Christopher Myers, Mrs. Robert Carson, Mrs. William LaRue; grocery—Mrs. Gilbert Van Nest, Mrs. Preston B. Goodfellow and Mrs. John Sharkey; aprons and pillows—Mrs. Valentine Utzinger, Mrs. Frank Conger and Mrs. Charles Jeter; flowers—Mrs. David Patterson, Mrs. Charles Quint and Miss Lizzie Frank; japanese—Mrs. William Crow and Miss Lottie Conger; supper—Mrs. John Mackey, Mrs. Elizabeth Peck, John Frank; waitresses—Mrs. John Conway, Miss Bertha Toushon and Miss Minnie Hook; ice cream—Mrs. David Patterson; waitresses—the Misses Tiny Viebrock, Bessie Carson, Helen Myers and Verna Stewart.

Other attractions include an apple tree in charge of Miss Edna Carson, and an orange tree in charge of Miss Grace Cranston. These trees contain apple and orange-shaped articles, the contents of which are not known until the purchaser opens them. Another form of amusement is the weighing scales in charge of Christopher Utzinger and Edward Baker, where for a small sum one can learn their weight. There is also a bride doll and patrons who purchase goods up to a certain amount are privileged to guess her name, which has been selected from the Bible.

Christopher Myers is chairman of the reception committee and he is assisted by several active workers at Faith chapel. The fair will continue this afternoon and evening and tomorrow afternoon and evening. Everything offered for sale has been kindly donated to the society from fancy pillows and cushions to pumpkins, cabbages and apples. Lunches and supper will be served each day. The proceeds from the fair will be placed in the building fund of the chapel.

LITERARY

The Popular Science Monthly for December contains the following articles: "Notes on Asiatic Museums," by Professor Bashford Dean; "The Place of Linnaeus in the History of Science," by Professor Arthur O. Lovejoy; "The Problem of Age, Growth and Death," by Professor Charles S. Minot; "The Radioactivity of Ordinary Substances," by W. W. Strong, of the Johns Hopkins University; "The Influence of Diet on Endurance and Efficiency," by professor Russell H. Chittenden; "Jean Rudolphe Louis Agassiz," by Professor Edward L. Morse; "A Trip Around Iceland," by L. P. Gratacap; "The Rise in Prices and the Salaries of Scientific Men;" "The Maria Mitchell Memorial."

"The Recollections of Lady Randolph Churchill," one of The Century's strongest features for 1908, deal with many of the most important events and personages of the years from 1874 to 1895—the time of Lord Randolph Churchill's brilliant social and political life. As the wife of one of England's most notable statesmen, as the guest and hostess of royalties, as the friend of leading personages in Europe, as a traveler in many countries, Mrs. George Cornwallis-West's story of her life as Lady Randolph Churchill and rich in judicious comment on social affairs and in anecdotes of prominent people.

The December issue of the Atlantic is a peculiarly interesting maazine. There are seven important articles each very brilliant of its kind. The leader is entitled "The Future of our Navigable Watres," and is written by John L. Mathews, who has been making a special study of the subject. "An Art Museum for the People," by Frank Jewett Mather, treats of the best practical arrangement of exhibitions for public use. Agnes Deans Cameron writes on "Wheat, the Wizard of the North," a striking article telling of the enormous immigration to the newly utilized fields of western Canada.

The Christmas issue of Woman's Home Companion is a sumptuous magazine, with several pages in color. The cover is reproduced from an exquisite painting by Jessie Willcox Smith, of a mother and babe. The number is full of Christmas atmophere—rattling good Christmas stories, Christmas pictures by prominent artists, and hundreds of Christmas suggestions of all sorts—practical, fanciful, unique. Laura Spencer Portor and Jeanette S. Porter contribute "Cinderella," a little family Christmas play. A feature is a theatrical reminiscence by Clara Morris, "Christmas on the Road." Dr. Edward Everett Hale writes of "How to Use the Christ-Mass."

"Why the Fleet Will Round the Horn" is one of the best articles of the month. It appears in the December National. It is complete in things one wishes to know, effecting international conditions, and tells why the supremacy of the Pacific is bound to become of importance. The installation of a social which promises to attract wide attention appears in this number. It is called "The Smoky God, or A Visit to the Inner World." It is by Willis George Emerson, the popular author of "Buell Hampton," "The Builders," etc.

Get-Rich-Quick

Wallingford said:

"It always helps some to remember that in this big United States people have been saving up money for years, just waiting for me to come and get it."

Which led to this reflection:

"I've never taken a fall out of the insurance game, and it sounds good. Ten cents seems like a piker game, but when we've got 250,000 members, that trifling ante amounts to $25,000 a month."

The conclusion is a live-wire story of credulous savers and an unscrupulous spender; it is the second story in MR. GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER'S Get-Rich-Quick series; it is called

Profitable Benevolence

and it appears in the Christmas Number of

"A Value Always Better Than Elsewhere."

Watson Suits Always Embody the Points You Admire.

What do you most admire in a suit? Is it style, fit, beautiful fabric or long wear? Or possibly you don't object to all four combined? Our suits are made to satisfy the buyer on all these points, and not one of them has been neglected in planning and building the clothing that has made the name of Watson famous. From the standpoint of economy—most real value for lowest price—our suits are unquestionably far above the level of the nearest Newark competitor. For fifty years we have worked to produce this superiority. Hard thinking, intelligent labor, taking time to handle each detail right, paying as much or more attention to the out-of-sight parts as to the surface—these things make Watson suits the suits for YOU.

$10, $12, $15, $20, $20, $22, $25.

Bought That Overcoat YET?

Winter has been a bit slow in coming—but don't for a minute think you won't need a seasonable overcoat in a few days. And "seasonable" should mean more than warm and comfortable. Watson overcoats are built from the best all-wool fabrics. ALL-WOOL, mind you—and they are "just the thing" in the style, fit and all-around elegance that particular men admire. Extreme styles and conservative styles. Grays, diagonal effects, new browns and staple blacks. A vest array for your selection. And you can pick without hesitation, knowing that every coat is Watson-made and therefore GUARANTEED as good as it looks.

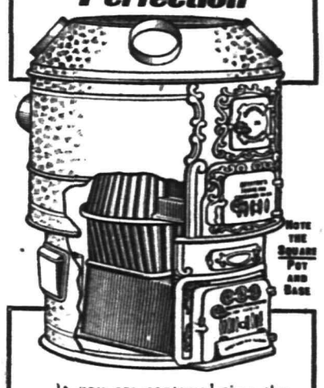
The Boynton Square Pot Brings Furnace Perfection



If you are contemplating the installation of furnace equipment, stop right here and see what big advantages await you in the patent Square Fire Pot found only in the Boynton Furnaces.

The sides are nearly perpendicular, so that ashes can't collect and hinder heat radiation; the grate bars operate with uniform motion under the whole fire bed, making ash clearance quick and complete.

THE SQUARE POT Patented

The perfect combustion resulting gives you maximum of heat from minimum of fuel, with least trouble on your part. Large, deep, square ash pit—easiest to clean, best draught.

All plumbers, steam-fitters and tinsmiths sell Boyntons, the only furnace with the Square Pot. Inquire about them.

There are BOYNTON heating plants of all kinds. Ask about our Round or Sectional Boilers for steam or hot water. Also ranges.

THE BOYNTON FURNACE COMPANY, 207-209 Water Street, New York.

Miss Marion Herr, of Flemington, has returned home after a visit with relatives here.

Miss Cora Gano, of this city, has returned from a visit at Annandale, Hunterdon county.

Mrs. P. Frank Stone, of West Front street, who has been detained at home for several weeks with rheumatism, is improving slowly.

Edward J. Cooley, of Watchung avenue, who has been in ill-health for a long time, is greatly improved, the old trouble having practically disappeared.

JOURNALISTIC OPINIONS

Kicks for the Laurel Crowned.

Farmer Orator James E. Martine, of Plainfield, emerged from the recent Gubernatorial campaign with flying colors. He appeared to the disinterested observers to be stronger when the campaign ended than he was when the battle began.

It is true that Frank S. Katzenbach was defeated by 8,000 plurality, but had not the farmer orator done his best to elect the choice of the Democratic State convention, and had not Allan L. McDermott made Martine the uncrowned king by declaring, after the smoke had lifted and Katzenbach had picked himself up: "With Martine as our candidate for Governor we would have beaten Fort?"

But now up comes the farmer orator once more, and this time as a sponsor for the Bryan third-time idea. The Plainfield Demosthenes wants the Peerless One to run for the third time for President, and he is so insistent that he has seen fit to wander to the Hoffman House in New York, and there, speaking as a Jerseyman, boom Bryan for the Presidential nomination with all the fervor for which Martine is known. Reports have it that Bryan and Martine had quite a long confidential chat, and that Martine's chances of landing a nice, fat job in case—that is, IF—the Nebraskan is elected President are now first class.

But how Martine's stock in North Jersey will fall when the workers—who know what it means to carry the Bryan load through a campaign—hear of Martine's trip to Bryan!

Next fall some desirable county and municipal offices are to be filled in various parts of New Jersey, in addition to the election of a President. Bryan ran in 1896 and in 1900. On both occasions the Bryan load was the load that dragged down the Democratic ticket in the mud and enabled the Republicans to scoop in local offices that the Democrats might have captured if the Democratic ticket har not been weighter down so much.

Martine—Oh! James E. Martine!

One week the uncrowned king and the recipient of Allan L. McDermott's laurels; the next week the object of the practical politicians' anathemas—a byword and a provocation to bitter words!—Jersey City Journal.

Beginning tonight at 7:45 o'clock the Seventh-Day Adventist church will hold its regular Friday evening meeting in the W. C. T. U. room, on Madison avenue. At these services subjects of interest to every one will be presented. The subject tomorrow night will be "The Second Coming of Christ the Hope of the Church." Services will also be held tomorrow afternoon at 3:15 o'clock.

TELEPHONY WITHOUT WIRES.

There Is a Possibility of Talking to America.

Wireless telegraphy is at last an established fact, both scientifically and commercially.

A director of the Amalgamated radio-telegraphy company told a reporter that his company is ready to take orders for the installation of a wireless telephony system to cover a distance up to 25 miles, over fairly flat land or over water.

"Recently," he said, "I spoke in our laboratory at Berlin to a temporary laboratory which we have erected some seven miles away from that city, and that was not under the best conditions, because the aerial (or wire) at the temporary station was suspended between two factory shafts instead of the usual masts.

"From experiments which we have been conducting in Berlin we are able to guarantee perfect communication by wireless telephony over 25 miles of not too hilly country.

"The inventor of the continuous undamped wave, by which means only is wireless telephony made possible, was M. Valdemar Poulsen, a noted Danish electrical engineer. About eight months ago we bought M. Poulsen's invention, together with all his plant and experimental stations, and we have secured patents for the whole world with the exception of the United States.

"We are now converting our stations at Oxford and Cambridge into wireless telephony stations on the Poulsen system, and when the work is completed, which will probably be in six weeks' time, we shall begin to experiment there. I am confident that we shall be successful in establishing wireless telephonic communication over the 60 miles which separate the two university towns, and I do not hesitate to express my conviction that in a few years' time we shall be able to speak across the Atlantic."—London Express.

SURNAMES NOT USED BY KINGS.

Only Christian Names Signed by Members of Royal Houses.

The origin of most royal houses was similar throughout Europe, and kings and their families, speaking broadly, never had or used surnames. They signed their Christian names alone.

So universally was this the case that it became rigid etiquette that a person of royal birth should not use a surname, though there have been numbers of cases of dynasties, like our own Stuarts, like the Bernadotte dynasty of Sweden or like the Bonaparte family, who unquestionably and indubitably had inherited surnames. But it has always been a puzzle why the cadet members of our own royal house do not subscribe themselves as peers by their peerage designations, as do other peers.

However, the fact is they do not, but it has not been discovered what are the rules which govern their signatures. The sovereign signs by the Christian name and usually adds "R." or "R. and I." Princes and princesses sign by their Christian names and sometimes, but not always, add the letter "P." When or why this is added or omitted is not known.

But the habits of royalty lead others into strange happenings. There was an occasion upon which Queen Victoria after a "function" was asked to sign a visitor's book. Her majesty write "Victoria R. and I." Princess Henry of Battenberg then wrote "Beatrice P." The turn of the local mayoress came next and she signed "Elizabeth." The surname was hastily written in the following day, but too late to prevent the story gaining currency.

Alligators in Ecuador.

A new minor industry that is developing in Ecuador is the killing and skinning of alligators. This industry was launched in 1903 by an American, who went to Guayaquil for the purpose of hunting down the myriads of alligators which abound in the River Guayas and its tributaries. He was markedly successful. The business was temporarily interrupted in the early part of 1905 by the untimely death of the American, who had started the fun, but it has recently been resumed. The total value of the alligator skins exported during the years 1903, 1904, 1905 and 1906 was $35,000. The skins shipped from Ecuador to this country last year weighed 57,000 pounds, and were valued at $4,873.—N. O. Times-Democrat.

Air Navigation Engines.

Ten or 15 years ago authorities writing on the subject stated that if only it were possible to make engines so light as to weigh but ten pounds a horsepower, there would be no difficulty in constructing a flying machine. A few years after, petrol engines were made of such weight. Today they are made and on the market, weighing no more than two and one-half pounds a horsepower.—Technical Literature.

She Told Him.

"About the greatest man who ever lived in this community was Dug Skinner; broad minded, big hearted, and brilliant; and yet he died with all his talent and goodness unsuspected."

"How did you come to find out about it?"

"I married his widow."—Houston Post.

Toyland Is Joyland for Little Folks.

COME A-RUNNING LITTLE CHILDREN---JOLLY OLD ST. NICHOLAS AWAITS YOU.

There has never been such a gathering of playthings outside of Nuremberg as is seen in this greatest of Toy Stores. Why, one would not imagine that so many different things were in all Toydom!

See the funny Teddy Bears climbing the trees! See Bruin playing chime bells and beating the drum!

See the comical monkeys—on the trees, in cages, everywhere—some eating, some combing their hair—as real as real can be! Hear the roaring lions! See the cutest doggies that ever were made! And camels and elephants—a whole menagerie!

See the mechanical drawbridge which closes as the engine approaches! See the beautiful all nickel plated engine—$25! See the electric ships—just like at Coney Island! See the Automobile Garages with their motor cars!

Oh, it's a wonderful show for the little folks, and we notice the older folks' eyes twinkle when they see the things that go. We're all children when we get into the toy store. Bring in the little ones, papa and mamma—just as you take them to the circus. You'll enjoy it as much as they.

Santa Claus says: "Welcome." Real jolly old Santa Claus is here to greet the children, as always, and is distributing great bags full of toys to his little visitors.

FOR WOULD-BE HOUSEKEEPERS

What little girl does not like to play house? What one does not feel that her chief delight would be in caring for a house?

Here are any number of little things for playing house that will prove interesting, entertaining and instructive to good little girls, and there is not anything better in the toy line that Santa Claus could bring them.

TO BE SUCCESSFUL.

Be industrious.

Be absolutely trustworthy.

Be ready to lend the helping hand when necessary.

Be trained. The day is past when prizes can be won by the unskilled.

Be accurate; down even to the little things which supposedly don't count.

Be "close-mouthed." The "unruly member" has cost many a woman her life's ambition.

Be polite and attentive. Rudeness and indifference are a mighty poor bank account on which to draw checks on success.

Be free from petty jealousy and arrogance. If you are "catty" or "stuck up" you will lack friends, and friends count heavily in cornering success.

Be a specialist. At least to a definite point. Get all the side-knowledge you can, none of it comes amiss; but concentration rather than diffusiveness is the secret of modern "making good."

Be always on the alert to further the interest of the cause you have at heart. This does not mean ruthless tramping on everyone or everything which interferes with those interests.

Be above-board. The must-be-hidden things in life have a way of coming to light just when the goal is in view. Don't have any and you can run your strenuous race for success more courageously.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Conceit my puff a man up, but it doesn't boost him up.

A guilty conscience needs no accuser, but it usually has one.

You can't always tell by a man's actions whether he is a fool or a genius.

It's the things you don't care for that people are always willing to hand you.

It isn't because he wears his hair short that a woman wishes she was a man.

Many a man who takes himself seriously is considered a joke by his neighbors.

Between an undertaker and a funeral director the difference lies in the size or their bills.

When a girl begins to boss a young man he might just as well begin to save money to buy furniture.

Lucky is the boy who has a plain, hard-fisted old father afflicted with a generous supply of horse sense.

Somehow a man never discovers that he is a fool until long after his neighbors have got next to the fact.

And once in a while a man doesn't marry because he's afraid he may have a large collection of his wife's folks to support.—Chicago News.

CONUNDRUMS.

When are muskets like corn stalks?
When stacked.

When are grass and the stars alike?
When shooting.

When is a walking stick like an old lady's hair?
When knotted.

What sort of a coat is finished and put on wet?
A coat of plaster.

Why cannot you send any more letters to Washington?
Because he is dead.

Why is a wornout coat like an empty spool?
They are both threadbare.

When is a man's watch chain like a reigning bell?
When it has many charms.

Why isn't the government going to have the bayonets any longer in the army?
Because they are long enough.

SUNFLOWER PHILOSOPHY.

Did anyone ever "thoroughly understand" you?

Some people become so busy they have no time to do anything.

Because a man is your friend do not agree with his foolish notions.

All the people say they would not do anything mean; still, there is a great deal of meanness in the world.

People never fail to appreciate goodness. But you can't fool them with bogus goodness. — Atchison (Kan.) Globe.

About all a man gets out of becoming well acquainted with some people is to hear all the disagreeable things which are said about him.

LAND WILLED TO GOD.

Philadelphia Couple Leave Property for Peculiar Purpose.

In La Porte, Pa., has been discovered a deed that conveys four acres of land to God. The instrument was made by Peter E. Armstrong and wife, once rich residents of Sullivan county, Pa., and is dated Aug. 3, 1864. The couple, so far as is known, were not members of a religious sect, but gave the portion of their property as the deed says, "that his saints may be fully separated from the world and gather together and enjoy that light and liberty which they did in the once faithful days of their theocracy." "Whereas," the deed continues, "in consideration of Almighty God in the past and present, which we do humbly acknowledge, and for the exceeding great and precious promise of unending life to those who in holy faith and patience wait for the coming of his anointed son to judge the world, which promises we have received from Him who is creator and original grantor of earth's territory to the children of men—we do by these presents deed, grant and convey to Almighty God, who inhabiteth eternity, and to his heirs, to the intent that it shall be subject to bargain and sale by man's cupidity no more forever." The four acres are situated just outside of the town of Celestia, and when transferred were part of a wilderness. One of Armstrong's sons looks after the property, but recognizes the deed.

CHEW GUM IN COURT.

Western Judges, Lawyers and Juries All Addicted to Habit.

The prevalence at important trials here and elsewhere seems to have had the somewhat unusual result of boosting the business of caterers to the public fancy in several directions. "Dementia Americana Sundaes" and popular dramatic productions based on municipal corruption plots are not the only things that have thrived on the general interest in the progress of these trials. Another result has been the breaking of the gum chewing monopoly, long accorded to the telephone and shop girl, for the habit has spread amazingly. It was begun locally, with the jurors in the graft trials. Forced to sit through long hours for five or six days a week in the court room and deprived of the solace of cigar or tobacco, the jurors chewed gum. The practice spread to the members of the juries which have followed, and now the casual visitor who drops in one of the court rooms where any of the trials are in progress will see a roomful of slowly grinding jaws, jurors and court room habitues alike, chewing the product of the choice factories.—San Francisco Call.

Diamonds in America.

Since 1830 many American diamonds have been authenticated, but none before has been found "in place." Most of those in the United States, Guiana and Brazil have come to light through the "breaking down," or wasting away, of the original rocks, which allows the diamonds to be washed into brooks and river gravels, as in South America. Many have been found in the glacial moraine of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin, whither prehistoric glaciers had swept them from some point in Canada. Search is now being made for the original resting place of these stones by several surveying parties along the line of the new transcontinental railway from Quebec to Winnipeg.—Review of Reviews.

Superstitions About Water.

Delightfully quaint are all the superstitions concerning water, and one which never fails to send little thrills along one's spine is that which holds that, if water is taken with soup, the drinker will cough in his grave. A lively quarrel is said to be the result of two friends washing their hands in the same water; and while water poured on the doorstep ensures prosperity, water thrown out will soon give cause to weep. Pleasant indeed for the maiden is the belief that every time she spills water her lover thinks upon her; but for the housewife the spilling of water foretells that, ere she can dry it up, her house will be full of callers.

Sold His Eternal Salvation.

Rodnoa Dielo, a Russian newspaper, reproduces from the original a curious deed of transfer. The document runs: "I, the undersigned, Nicolia Nicephorovitch, peasant, 38 years of age, of the Dogmarovski district of Melitopol, have fallen into evil days. I am at the end of my resources, and hereby certify that I have sold for the sum of 50 rubles my eternal salvation and place in the kingdom of heaven to Makar Selenky." The signature is attested by one elder of the village council.

Corrosion of Boilers.

Corrosion or the wasting away of the iron of a steam boiler may be due to the acid in the feed water, says Ideal Power. Where sulphuric acid is found in this water its destructive force is often spent in destroying the feed pipes before it actually enters the boiler. This is expensive, annoying, and even dangerous in some cases, but is much preferable to a boiler explosion.

BRIAN BORUS DOWN THE WELLINGONS

For the second time since the bowling tourney started at Campbell's alleys, a competing team dropped three straight games last night. The losers were Frank Blatz' Wellingtons, while Harry Radin's Brian Borus were the victors. The triple defeat seemed a special bit of hard luck inasmuch as the Wellingtons were rolling on an absent member's previous poor average and lost the first try by five points.

Double centuries were plentiful and one each was credited to Dr. Herbert, Harry Ackor, Captain Radin, Captain Blatz and Harry Gilmore. The best rolling of the night was accomplished by Harry Ackor, who walked away with an average of 194.1. Gilmore, of the losing side, got an average of 184 and Captain Radin helped out nicely with 182.1. McMahon demonstrated good form by getting 175.1.

"Fozzy" Firstbrook failed to put in an appearance when the series was called and the Wellingtons had to proceed without him. According to the rules laid down the average for his previous games had to be taken and this was 114, a figure much below his regular shooting. By capturing the three games, the Brian Borus now rank in percentage with the Bismarcks, the team that has held first place since the start of the tourney.

The scores:

CHORUS GIRL'S REMAINS ARRIVE FROM THE WEST.

The body of Miss Augusta Kelly, whose death occurred at St. Paul's last Saturday night, arrived in Plainfield this morning, when Undertaker George Cole made arrangements with members of the family for the burial. "Lottie LeRoy," as was her stage name, was a chorus girl in the Washington Society Girls' Company, now playing in the West. She was taken ill two weeks ago while appearing at the Star theatre, St. Paul, and was removed to St. Joseph's Hospital, that city, where she died. Funeral services were held in St. Paul's Cathedral by Father Lawler.

The cathedral choir furnished music and the pallbearers were selected from among the player folks.

The burial of Miss Kelly's body was beside that of her mother in St. Mary's cemetery. The mother died in August last and within a week of that time Miss Kelly's brother passed away.

Former Chapel as "Gym."

The offer of William G. Debele to let the pupils of the borough high school use the old Warren chapel building as a gymnasium and basketball hall was formally accepted yesterday, after an inspection of the building had been made by Supervising Principal Henry C. Krebs, of the borough schools, and Principal Benjamin Phelps, of the Somerset street school. The boys' athletic association of the school will at once fit up the main hall as a place to play basketball and the baskets will be installed without delay.

All Souls' Fair.

The Christmas fair and bazaar, given under the auspices of the Women's Alliance of All Souls' church, opened yesterday afternoon. Mrs. A. C. Nickerson is chairman of the general committee. The following women are chairmen of the various tables: Mrs. R. C. Leonard, Miss Caroline Haviland, Miss Newman, Mrs. Joseph O. Osgood and Miss Laura Osgood. The fair will be continued this afternoon and tonight. A feature of the evening at the church will be a supper to be served.

Tells of "Needs of Our Race."

Rev. Dr. Creditit, president of the Downingtown Industrial School, near Philadelphia, delivered an able address at the Calvary Baptist church, last night, on the subject, "Needs of Our Race." After his talk the congregation gave Dr. Creditt nearly $50 for his work.

"Then you will see that there are no inquisitive servants to spy impertinently. Take us up on the lift yourself. The porter may leave the baggage below, since Mr. Haddon goes early to-morrow morning with his nurse and his physician. He must not be disturbed in his rest. To-night he is very ill, as you see. There is a long journey before us to-morrow. I shall arrange with you later concerning the diligence. Lastly, you will discreetly keep your eyes away. You will certainly not see his Excellency."

Dr. Starva now placed one foot on the carriage step, and leaning toward me, gently aroused me. I opened my eyes slowly and muttered something to the effect that we had arrived. Alighting, I grasped his arm mechanically, and we proceeded slowly into the hotel, across the hall, to the elevator. The little concierge trotted solemnly in front of us.

The elevator, as well as the hall and corridors, was deserted at this late hour. We met no one.

Arriving at the suite of rooms alloted to us the concierge was summarily dismissed. But before he left us the servant insisted on whispering to Dr. Starva these words, which no doubted startled him as much as they did me:

"The sister of his Excellency is in the hotel. Shall I tell her that—"

Dr. Starva clutched the shoulder of his informant, and held him in a fierce, vise-like grip.

"Three times stubborn fool!" he growled, "what concern is it to Mr. Haddon that the sister of Sir Mortimer Brett is at this hotel? Certainly you will not tell her."

He thrust his spectacled, pallid face close to that of the trembling servant. Then releasing him suddenly, he pushed him without, the little concierge rubbing his shoulder ruefully. Immediately he regretted this unnecessary violence. He stepped out into the corridor, and I guessed that he had smoothed the injured vanity of the gold-laced official with more of the crisp notes.

He had scarcely entered the room again before he admitted Madame de Varnier, and again the key was turned.

They lost no time in vain talk or congratulations on the success of their trick, whatever its meaning might be. Dr. Starva half led, half carried me into a bedroom adjoining. There I was put to bed with as little ceremony as a helpless infant is disposed of for the night. For a moment Starva looked down on me grimly. Then he disappeared, closing the door carefully behind him.

Now, indeed, I understood why Helena Brett and her mother had been so startled when first they had seen me—why Madame de Varnier had shown herself no less concerned—why I had caught Dr. Starva spying on me—why it was plotted that I should be drugged and brought hither in this melodramatic fashion.

In the world's history there have been many instances of men playing the pretender, but certainly none more innocent than myself. I should be dense indeed now did I fail to comprehend everything—from Madame de Varnier's first greeting, to the episode of the cloak and hat.

I recalled the woman's ghastly despair when she had read the telegram in the kursaal. "He is dead," she had repeated over and over.

Sir Mortimer Brett, minister plenipotentiary at the court of Sofia, was dead. The adventurers for some purpose of their own, not yet to be guessed, had deliberately planned that I be mistaken for him at this hotel.

That the ambassador was dead was a bitter disappointment to my hopes. The opportunity to fulfill the task that Helena had given me was not to be mine after all. And now that I knew that, what further excuse had I to be as clay in the hands of these people? I was tempted to burst into the room, there, to prick the bubble of their intrigue.

But if I did that, though I might baffle the execution of their plans, I should be utterly ignorant as to the nature of those plans. The danger to myself in continuing to play the role of accomplice was very great. The officers of the law would not be so touchingly simple as to believe that I was abetting the plans of this precious couple only with a view of bringing them to final justice.

But much more alarming than possible danger to myself was the fact that Helena Brett was in this hotel.

Before morning a cruel but just chance might bring us face to face, and in her eyes I should stand convicted of the grossest villainy. With diabolical cunning, Dr. Starva had insisted that I was Mr. Haddon, and yet he had deliberately planned that I be mistaken for Sir Mortimer Brett. The intent to deceive was obvious.

When that were proved, on my head would fall the greatest censure. For who would believe that I was an innocent victim? But I had gone too far to retreat now. Or rather, I had not gone far enough. Granted that Sir Mortimer Brett were dead, and that my elaborate plans to rescue him from the hands of these adventurers were a failure, the fact remained that for some dark purpose of their own the conspirators were either concealing the knowledge of his death, or were using that knowledge for some base purpose. They must be brought to justice. That justice could be obtained surely and swiftly only at risk to myself.

How many minutes had passed now? Dared I move, dared I even open my eyes? For aught I knew they were watching me, were even in the room at this instant. I lay quite still, breathing stertorously.

The handle of the door was turned sharply. I heard the weight of Dr. Starva thrown against it as it jammed and for some moments resisted his efforts.

The flare of an electric light fell on my face. He stood at my bedside. I muttered incoherently, tossing about, and turning my face from the glare. Then I was alone again.

I was in a room little larger than an American hall bedroom. They were cavalier enough of the dignity of Sir Mortimer Brett's understudy. I must be lying in the chamber of the valet and not of the master.

I leaped lightly to the floor, I tiptoed to the closed door. To my consternation it was too tightly closed to permit me to see anything in the room beyond. It had creaked loudly in resisting Dr. Starva's efforts; certainly I was not so rash as to attempt to open it, however cautiously and slightly.

To all purposes, I was a caged prisoner. The risk I had run to spy on them would be to no purpose unless I could surprise them at their night's work.

I raged at my impotence. Then I thought of the window. Perhaps there was a balcony.

There was no blind at the window, but wooden shutters that fastened with a catch. I pushed open the French windows. Yes, there was the balcony, and to my joy I saw that it extended the length of the suite.

And now a new difficulty stared me in the face. At any moment they might enter the bedroom, and when I had gained the balcony, outside the salon, would shutters prevent my seeing within?

As to the first risk I must take it. The door had jammed before; it would jam again. The noise made in opening it would give me some warning.

I gained the balcony; there were shutters, but I could see readily through the interstices.

It was the apartment we had first entered; and it bore unmistakable signs of having been minutely ransacked. A large empire desk had been pried open. Papers had been abstracted from the drawers and pigeonholes; they lay about in confusion. In more than one place the carpet had been torn up at the edges.

As I peered cautiously within, Dr. Starva was lowering the Venetian blind of another window. Evidently they were searching the room with the knowledge that an article of value was hidden there.

I heard Madame de Varnier cry out excitedly. A packet, concealed between the slats of a Venetian blind, had fallen to the floor.

Without a doubt it was for this packet of papers that they had been searching. Madame de Varnier tore the envelope in feverish haste. She scanned the contents of the papers with intense eagerness, Dr. Starva looking over her shoulder. As they read, their faces expressed disappointment and chagrin. Dr. Starva questioned Madame de Varnier repeatedly. She put aside his fierce inquiries with impatience.

And now I made a second discovery.

I thought I understood the meaning of this extraordinary plot in coming to the hotel at Vitznau. I had guessed long since that I bore a sufficiently striking resemblance to Sir Mortimer Brett to deceive at least the first casual glance. Otherwise, why the amazement of the Bretts and Madame de Varnier in first seeing me? How else could I explain the events of the night? They had drugged me, or attempted to do so, that I might be oblivious to inconvenient inquiries or greetings. The hat and cloak of Sir Mortimer, which Dr. Starva had procured in some manner, were unusual enough in character to be readily recognized by the servants of the hotel. Sir Mortimer was known to be ill, and my condition would arouse no suspicion.

All the facts as I swiftly reviewed them fitted neatly. The inference was unmistakable:

This was the suite of Sir Mortimer Brett. They had come for the packet of papers they were now reading. The presence of Sir Mortimer Brett with them had gained them ready admission to his rooms.

And now that they had found the papers?

Had I served my purpose? Was the invitation to Madame de Varnier's chateau a ruse cleverly planned simply to bring me to this hotel as Sir Mortimer?

In that case I must be alert that they did not slip through my hands, leaving me here in Sir Mortimer's rooms to explain my predicament on the morrow as best I might.

Or was this the prelude to other adventures even more exciting? Was the game only just begun?

Still I watched them intently, while these perplexing questions demanded an answer. They had finished the papers now. Dr. Starva was seated in sullen gloom; Madame de Varnier glided to and fro in angry indecision.

A loud knock on the door opening into the hall startled me almost as much as themselves. Madame de Varnier thrust the papers into the bosom of her dress; then, while Dr. Starva at a sign from her answered the summons, she hastily restored the room to outward signs of order.

"What is it? Who is there?" Starva demanded in an agitated voice.

"It is Henri, the concierge," replied the intruder.

"To-morrow, to-morrow."

"But there is an English gentleman who says that he must see his Excellency."

It would be difficult to say whether this startling request alarmed them more than it did myself. I listened breathless. Dr. Starva's presence of mind seemed to have quite deserted him. He drew a revolver from his pocket. Madame de Varnier made a contemptuous sign expressive of his folly. He thrust it into his coat again; renewed his expostulations to the concierge. But the man was persistent. At last, at a signal from Madame de Varnier, he was admitted to the room. The presence of Madame de Varnier startled him. For the first time she spoke.

"My dear man, be discreet. Behold me, a woman, and at this hour of the night in a gentleman's apartment. Is not that a reason that you exercise your discretion?"

It was cleverly done, her perturbation and distraction. She made her appeal dramatically, her hands clasped in her anxiety.

"Madam is mistaken if she thinks I am not discreet," protested the little man. "If it were possible I would shield madam. But he stands without, in the hall, this stubborn Englishman. Madam can save her reputation only by retreating to the bedroom. Have no fear, I shall not betray madam."

It was time for me to beat a hasty retreat. But my curiosity still held me.

"Have I not told you," fiercely interrupted Dr. Starva, "that it is not his Excellency who is here with madam? It is a Mr. Haddon, and madam is his nurse and I am his physician. Tell this stubborn Englishman that, imbecile."

"Monsieur will please be reasonable. I cannot help using my eyes."

"Use them yourself if you will," desperately replied Starva. "But at least you need not tell this Englishman the truth."

"It is impossible to deceive him," persisted the concierge. "All day he has been waiting for his Excellency. A quarter of an hour ago he was smoking in the garden below. He has seen the light shining through the shutters of his Excellency's apartment. He knows that it is the apartment of his Excellency."

"You can tell him that you have placed Mr Haddon in these rooms for the night only," persuaded Dr. Starva, producing his pocketbook.

"No, monsieur," replied the concierge sorrowfully, his eyes on the notes held toward him. "It is impossible. He will tell the manager and I shall lose my place."

"Go to this Englishman," interrupted Madame de Varnier, "demand his business. Say that his Excellency is ill very ill. There have been days that he has not slept. His physician and his nurse have grave fears for his life if he is aroused. To awaken him is perhaps to bring on again a crisis of the nerves. But as soon as he awakes, we will summon the Englishman."

"I go," the servant assented reluctantly, "but it will be useless."

I dared not await the result of his errand. I returned deliberately to my bed. Quickly so that I might not lose my breath. I was in a terrible predicament. To rescue myself from it I must make known my true identity without an instant's delay. The knowledge that I certainly should not be believed made me hesitate. No; I had gone too far to retreat now. If my strait proved absolutely desperate and a confession was inevitable, I should be believed as readily later as now. In the meantime chance might favor me, and my ruse be not wholly in vain.

TRAIN AND TRACK.

Nearly all railway stations in Germany are equipped with restaurants, and, as a rule, the restaurant is the only waiting room.

It is a rare sight on German railways, including the provincial branches, to see a freight train that does not have an oil tank with an American inscription.

Both the Alton and Burlington have restored their old schedule on the western run by cutting time. They lost business by lengthening the schedule to Kansas City and Denver.

The Pennsylvania Railroad, noting the increasing scarcity of all varieties of lumber, has gone into the forestry business on a large scale. Within a short time it will have millions of trees under cultivation from which woodmay be obtained for railroad ties.

Putnam & DeGraw's dry goods' store on West Front street is an ideal place to shop. A full line of winter goods is offered for men and women.

The Seal Skin Coat

By MAB ERVIN

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

The first time John Crawford saw her he thought of his sister. Not that the fleeting glance he had of her piquant face was like Marie's, but there was something to the bird-like set of her little head, her height, and the trimness of her slender, swaying form, that carried him back to New York, and the sister, and home.

Though he was going in the opposite direction when he came face to face with her in the crowd, and caught a flash of brown eyes and red lips, and noticed a crimson rose in her black hair under the rim of her black toque, he turned and followed her. She went so fast he could not catch up with her, swaying gracefully to the motion of the crowd. Suddenly he lost her, and when he was trying to decide what shop she could have entered she came out of a confectioner's with a box in her hand he knew held bon bons. She looked him square in the face this time, and he caught the outline of small, delicate features, an oval face, and finely pencilled brows above her flashing dark eyes, under the fine gauze of a complexion veil. She entered a cab, and he heard her give the order "Hotel Cecil." That was the last he saw of her in London, though it may be recorded that John Crawford frequented the Cecil for everything from dinners to cigars.

Crawford loafed around London for a month afte. seeing the little lady, then decided to go home. Though Crawford never found it out, he had been the butt of the London shop keepers, and carried home trinkets of various design and price for all of his friends and his sister's friends. Chief among them was a seal skin coat for Marie. It was one of those long English ulsters, lined with white brocade, and with narrow collar and cuffs of ermine, such as English women of great wealth wear on the continent. It was made to come to the hem of a short skirt, and when he purchased it he smiled to think of the "dash" Marie would cut in it on Broadway. But his smile lessened when his friend, Lord Thurston, remarked as Crawford packed it away:

"Gad, old man. That coat will cost you a jolly fortune to get through the custom house on your side."

Crawford shook out the rich folds of bronzed gold skin and looked it over thoughtfully. The duty had never occurred to him.

"Tell you what you do, old chap. Get some woman aboard to wear it, and pass it through on her back. That's what I did once, crossing from France. I'd hev checked in if I hadn't."

It was a good idea, and Crawford took it to heart. But the coat was made for such a little waist, he wondered about it.

Some men would rather cheat the government out of a dollar than find $50, and Crawford happened to be one of them. Besides, his purse was getting slim.

When he boarded the Majestic at Liverpool his keen eye singled out a trim little figure, in a close-fitting tailored black coat that touched her high-heeled boots. She was leaning over the rail watching the passengers come aboard, and the wind gave him a glimpse of white satin coat lining, a red cloth skirt, and billows of white lace, close about silk clad ankles and patent leather boots. With his brain awhirl he crossed the gang plank. Small need to look twice to know it was she of the "Hotel Cecil."

"She for Marie's coat," he said to himself as he climbed aboard.

He saw her again at table a'hote, but she sat at the farther end of the table from him. He tried to attract her by his gaze, and just as she left the table she looked his way, and he saw a smile that was like a flash of pearl, and was gone. At least she had recognized him.

That evening, as the moon hung high and made shadows of opal on the waters that gently lashed the boat as it sped ahead like some great bird, he saw her leaning over the side of the boat looking at the sky. Her features were so clear cut against the water, they seemed to be chiseled of marble, the expression of her long, dark eyes made him feel her thoughts were not of earth, while the soft wind blowing wisps of black hair across her cheek, gave her the appearance of a mythical goddess.

An hour later he was talking to her in the shadow of the grand salon, while the music from the stringed orchestra floated to them amid the music of the sea.

The next morning madam, who was an excellent sailor, wore on deck a long ulster of seal skin, lined with white brocade, and with narrow collar and cuffs of ermine. And Crawford took pride in seeing her wear it as if she had grown in it.

"If I had not promised it to Marie, I would give it to her, it suits her so well," he told himself.

Madam proved herself a coquette. Though she granted favors to none, she made many friends among both men and women. The greatest compliment Crawford could exact from her was a slight pressure of the hand when he said good night, or met her on deck in the morning. She never forgot the pressure, and she never failed to wear the seal skin coat. She said she was going to New York to meet her husband who sang the tenor in the coming grand opera season, and she was all impatience to see him again. But her smile to Crawford belied her protested impatience. While he would have given her his bank account if she had demanded it, he did not offer to give her the seal skin coat—and only because he had written Marie about its beauty.

At last, much too soon for Crawford, Ellis island was reached and madam walked aboard in the seal skin coat. She paid a trifling duty on some laces, while Crawford paid well for his trinkets, and thanked his lucky stars madam wore the seal skin coat.

Another day, and the Majestic anchored in New York. Madam wore the seal skin coat down the gang way, amid the admiring glances of passengers, crowds, and newspaper men. She asked for a cab, and Crawford found her one.

"To the Netherlands," she said, and Crawford, with her permission, seated himself beside her. A half hour, and she had obtained a suite of rooms, saying her husband would come within the hour.

"Now for the coat, and I'll go," said Crawford.

"Ze coat?" said madam. "What eez ze coat?"

"The seal skin I let you wear."

"M'sieur says ze seal skin coat eez hees? Pardon, et eez mine." Madam folded her small arms and looked at him laughingly.

Crawford took it as a joke and laughed, but a feeling of uneasiness came over him. He ordered madam a bottle of wine, and said to give him the coat and he would go. But madam protested she had no coat of his. She had but three, an opera coat, a black tailor-made, and a seal skin ulster all of which she could prove were her own.

"But, madam, my seal skin coat for my sister? It is mine," said Crawford, beginning to see through madam's smiles.

Madam shrugged her small shapely shoulders half way to her ears, and coolly opened her traveling bag, produced a cigarette and lighted it, puffing smoke delicately into space, while he walked the floor.

"Give me that coat," said Crawford, finally, with great sternness, "or I will call the police and have you arrested."

"Call ze gend'armes," said she carelessly. "If you try to prove zat beautiful coat ez not mine, I will say zat you cheat ze government. Many people aboard will zay 'Yes, madam vore ze coat.'"

A footstep sounded outside just then, and madam pushed Crawford into the next room.

"My husband. He veel keel you," she said.

The coat was lost, for Crawford would never stand the scandal of arrest, and his name being mixed with that of an unscrupulous French woman. Crawford stood still with his hand on the door and listened. A man entered, and he heard madam give a cry of joy. He heard a passionate kiss, a loving greeting in French between man and woman, and then he opened the door and went out unheeded and unheard.

It was a month later he saw madam again. She was at Sherry's with a party from the grand opera. She wore the seal skin coat over a gown of lace, and to the admiring ones he heard her say in French: "Oh, yes, but the duty on it was terrible, terrible."

HE MISSED THE HAMMOCK.

And the Discovery He Made in the Early Morning.

"I never go to bed in a sleeper in warm weather that I don't think of my experience on the way from here to Cincinnati summer before last," said Frank N. Conwell of Chicago.

"I caught a 9:30 train out of here one night—one hot July night it was—and I was tired as a pack horse, tired and hot and sleepy. I hadn't been on the train long until I decided to crawl into my lower seven and try to get what slumber was coming to me. I found it wasn't so warm in the berth with the window up and I fired my things into the little hammock alongside of me, put on my nightie and went right after the skeeps.

"I've told it to you just the way I thought it was at the time. Next morning I woke up in Cincinnati and could not find my clothes, nothing but a pair of shoes, one sock and a necktie. Even my collar was gone. I stuck my head out to ask the porter who it was had robbed me, but before I shouted to him I took a look across my bed and it all came to me. The night before when I thought I was throwing my duds into the little hammock I had been throwing 'em out the window. My wardrobe was probably scattered over nine different counties.

"It just happened that I had put my money and watch under my pillow and I had another pair of trousers and a clean shirt in my grip.

"And, say, the bunch in the car when they heard about it, all wanted to contribute something. I got enough stuff together finally so that I could walk up town without violating any ordinances. Then I bought a hand-me-down two-piece suit."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

On the Roof Garden.

She pointed to her wealth of golden tresses.

"My friends tell me my hair is a dream," she chirped.

"Ah, sister," replied the gaunt comedian, "I have always considered your hair a dream."

"And why have you considered my hair a dream, Percy?"

"Because it comes off every night."

And then, amid loud applause, the imported band struck up the tear-producing ballad, "I'd Rather Be a Pickle Than a Lemon Any Day."

SOME CLEVER CONUNDRUMS.

What ships hardly ever sail out of sight? Hardships.

What cape would a condemned criminal prefer? Escape.

How many insects does it take to make a landlord? Ten-ants.

What is there peculiar about a sculptor? He makes faces and busts.

Why do men build ovens in houses? Because they cannot build houses in ovens.

Why is a nearly burnt-out candle a county in Ireland? Because it is Wicklow.

When is a shoemaker one of the most religious men? When he mends the soul.

Why is the conundrumist like a dog's tail? Because he is bent on being waggish.

How does a big railway time table resemble human life? It has many "ups" and "downs."

What is that which is often brought to the table, always cut but never eaten? A pack of cards.

Which is the more valuable, a £10 note or 10 sovereigns? A £10 note: because when you put it in your pocket you double it, and when you take it out you see it in creases.

AWFUL CREATURE WAS NINETY FEET LONG

Recent Grewsome Experience of a Chicago Man Is Sample of a Series of Such Cases

Among these people was Mr. Emil Winkler, who brought to Cooper a tapeworm that proved to be over ninety feet in length. Mr. Winkler, who resides at 182 East Ohio Street, Chicago, had this to say of his experience: "For five years I have been more or less complaining. I have had severe headaches, and any food that I would eat would nauseate me. I would have bad dreams almost every night; dizzy spells would compel me to quit work. Black spots would appear before my eyes when stooping over and rising quickly. I would feel tired most of the time; in fact, I had no life in me to speak of for the last five years. I tried various treatments, and one physician in St. Louis was recommended to me, and I was under his treatment some time, but as usual I obtained no relief.

"So many people asked me to try Cooper's preparation that I decided to do so, and after using it for a few days, this awful thing passed from my system. I feel much better already, and I want to say right here that I thank Mr. Cooper a hundred times for what his medicine has done for me. I would not take $5,000 and have that thing back in my system again."

Mr. Winkler is a fair sample of the experience of many during Cooper's stay in Chicago, and this no doubt helped to account for the enormous sale of the Cooper preparation in this city and others, recently visited by the young man.

We sell and will be pleased to explain the Cooper preparations. —f. S. Armstrong.

ROMANCE OF GREAT SINGER.

From the Railway Platform to the Opera House.

M. Jean Note, the famous barytone of the Paris opera house, and who has sung more often on the stage of the Paris opera than any other living singer, left Paris the other day to be present at the fetes which were held recently, in his native town of Tournay, in Belgium, in honor of the great artist's jubilee.

M. Jean Note's career has been a singularly romantic one. He was born at Tournay, and began life there as a weaver in a cloth factory. He was noted for his fine voice among his fellow workmen. He left the factory to become a railway porter at the Tournay station, and soon became a signalman.

At the age of 21 he became a conscript in the Belgian army, and it was while undergoing his military service that his officers took an interest in him, and subscribed a purse to send him to the Conservatoire of Music at Ghent.

Here he worked hard, and succeeded in obtaining the first prize for singing. He made his debut in "Lucie de Lammermoor," at the Lille theater in 1885. He was then engaged for two years at the Antwerp theater and for three years at Lyons, after which he went straight to the Paris opera, which he has never left since.

While an opera singer in Paris M. Note greatly distinguished himself by an act of daring and cool-headedness which saved an express train from total wreck. On September 27, 1897, M. Note was standing on the platform of the Paris suburban station of Colombes, when it was seen to the horror of the numerous passengers waiting in the station that a train of 18 vans loaded with dynamite had shunted out on the main line on which the Cherbourg Express was due at that moment.

The stationmaster and porters lost their heads. Note, recollecting that he had been a signalman, lost not a moment. He ran to the levers, pulled them back, and sent the dynamite wagons on to a siding just as the express came hustling past. For this, M. Note received high distinction from the French government.—London Mail.

DRY FALLS OF LODORE.

The Disappointment of the American Tourist Was Great.

Southey's description of Lodore has given to that charming friend of holiday days a reputation which is a little unfortunate. It has brought to its course worshippers from afar, when there has not been a cupful of water to perform as much as the meanest of feats which the poet describes. One such visitor was an American. He had seen Niagara again and again. He read Southey on the wonders of Lodore, and once more visited the vast cataract of his native land. Then, feeling that, after all, Niagara must be very small potatoes compared with the falls of which the poet had sung, resolved to consecrate his holiday to the contemplation of its beauties and grandeur. Het set out the moment he reached Keswick, and long walked and toiled over rocks and boulders. He could not find the falls. He rested, and asked: "Can you direct me to the Falls of Lodore?" "Why, you're a-sittin' on 'em," was the heart-breaking answer. The falls of all the adjectives were dry!—St. James' Gazette.

A Strange Seed Pod.

The antirrhinum, or snapdragon, is one of the old-fashioned garden flowers known by everyone. Although it is a visitor from southern Europe it has been here so long that it has become naturalized. When we say "lion's mouth," "frog's mouth," "calf's mouth," "rabbit's mouth," we mean snapdragon, all these names being suggested by its grotesque, maskilke corolla. But there is something still more grotesque if we will wait till the seed time and gather the dried brown skeleton of the seed pod. Look at them sideways, under a bright lamplight if possible, and you will find they have quite a resemblance to a rhinoceros. Remove the calyx and the little horns on the nose, and look at them from the front, and they have a still more striking resemblance to human skulls, and by turning them about you get all sorts of queer expressions on the grinning mouth.

Japanese Railroads.

The rapid growth of Japan's railways during the last few years is seen from the fact that in 1875 the number of passengers carried was 2,754,426, whereas in 1905, it had been augmented to 113,675,403. During the same period the volume of freight traffic had also risen to considerably over 21,000,000 tons, while the total receipts had risen from 644,459 to 69,033,165 yen.

No Fiction.

The father—What is that book you are reading, my son?

The son—It's a story of a man who invested his money in a western gold mine and lost every cent of it.

"Oh, that's all right, my boy. I was afraid you'd got a hold of a work of fiction!"—Yonkers Statesman.

Silk From Japan.

The exports of silk from Japan during the season of 1906-7 aggregated 98,000 bales, a figure never before attained. America took 71,230 bales and Europe 27,436. This season's record will apparently exceed that of any previous season.

FARMER EASY FOR THIEVING BEARS

ROBBED OF APPLES, CORN AND HONEY BECAUSE HE FEARED A FINE IF HE SHOT.

COSTS HIM HIS DOG, TOO

When He Discovers His Right to Kill, Marauding Bruins Suddenly Vamoose—Has Not Seen Them Since.

Trout Run, Pa.—Michael Cromister, an aged farmer in the wild Bobst mountain district, has suffered severely from the ravages of a family of black bears, which he was not permitted to kill under the game laws.

Cromister is past 70 years of age. He and his aged wife live alone on a small farm, their house being nearly two miles away from the nearest neighbor, while just beyond their place begins the wild wooded scope that extends far away into southeastern Tioga county, embracing the famous Blockhouse and Nauvoo hunting territory. Cromister has been a hunter and trapper all his life, and has many a nick in the butt of his old-fashioned rifle to show the number of deer and bear slain. He is still a sure shot, despite his years.

About two months ago he read in his county newspaper that a farmer in the Nauvoo country had been arrested, and fined $50 under the provisions of the new game law for killing a black bear. This bear was believed to be one that had killed two sheep belonging to the farmer in question, but as the farmer had no proof of identification he could not have the fine remitted. Old Mr. Cromister did not know that the law permits the killing of thieving bears when caught upon the premises.

Three weeks ago, one night, the Cromisters were awakened by the loud barking of their dog, which was chained to a kennel in the yard. The old man, lighting a lantern, went down to investigate, and found that a family of black bears, three in all, had taken possession of a red astrakan apple tree just over the fence from the house, and while one of the thieves was up among the boughs shaking the fruit down the other two were greedily devouring it. He started for his rifle, then thought of the Nauvoo farmer who was arrested and fined for killing a bear, and concluded that he hadn't $150 to waste on three bears, though he and Mrs. Cromister had reckoned on making five dollars clear off the apples on that red astrakan tree. He set the dog loose, but the bears turned on the animal. Next the bear in the tree broke a fine limb from the trunk and practically ruined the tree in its hurry to get down to join the fight.

Cromister, by this time almost beside himself with anger at the audacity, thievishness and destructiveness of the bears, resorted to frightening the animals by tying a lantern on a bean pole and poking it toward them. This had the effect of putting them to flight.

Two nights later the bears were back on another foraging visit, and the old dog, this time thoroughly cowed, whined in fear instead of barking. Again the old man and his lantern went out. This time a fourth bear had joined the party, and the quartette was in a patch of sweet corn, not a stone's throw from the house. The roasting ears were in prime condition, and the bears seemed to appreciate them, for in their greed to help themselves they were destroying stalks and all. Cromister got the bean pole, tied his lantern thereon, and again put the marauders to flight. The corn patch in the morning looked as though a half dozen cows had been in it. It was practically ruined.

Cromister roundly denounced such a law as would prevent an American citizen from protecting his own property from thieves, be they men or beasts. For nearly a week the Cromisters were permitted to rest in peace. Then, about 12 o'clock one night they were awakened again by the dog's whining. This time Cromister armed himself with both rifle and lantern. He told his wife that unless Rover spunked up and gave fight to those bears he would shoot him; that he had to shoot something, and, if the law wouldn't let him shoot the bears, he would shoot the dog. And he did. He found that two of the bears had upset a hive of honey back of the house and were devouring it at a lively rate, except for the time that they had to stop to cuff each other. The cowardly dog wouldn't go near them, and a bullet from the old man's gun laid him low for good. Then the bean pole and the lantern were rigged up and the thieving bears put to flight. The next day he came to town, eight miles, to get a justice of the peace to tell him the law about bears. When he learned that he had a perfect right to kill bears when they were discovered on his premises in the act of stealing, Cromister used language not found in the spelling book. He went back home, loaded his rifle anew—and since then not a single bear has shown itself around the Cromister premises.

CARRIED THROUGH SEWER THREE BLOCKS INTO RIVER

ROPE BREAKS AND TOILER HAS A THRILLING EXPERIENCE—LIVES TO TELL THE TALE.

New York.—John Hoffman, 55 years old, an employe in the bureau of sewers, was dropped into a five-foot sewer in Third avenue, near One Hundred and Twenty-eighth street, owing to the breaking of a rope, and shot through the sewer to its terminus at Harlem river and One Hundred and Thirty-first street. That he came out alive is considered remarkable.

With several other employes Hoffman was at work repairing the main sewer. They had almost finished their labors when a heavy rainstorm started. Hoffman was down in the hole about four feet above the swiftly flowing water. Around his waist was a rope, which was held by the men in the street above.

As the water poured into the various sewers leading into the main pipe, the water rose higher and the rope broke and Hoffman fell into the water.

His fellow workmen instantly dashed up the avenue to One Hundred and Thirty-first street, where the sewer runs into the Harlem river. Just as they reached the spot, Hoffman shot out into the river. He landed near a boathouse float, swam to it and held on until a policeman and workmen rescued him.

After being given dry clothes he went home. He told the policeman that he went through the sewer "so fast he did not have time to look at the scenery."

FAT PORKER LAMES MAN.

Runs Between His Legs and Packing-House Worker Has Broken Hip.

Indianapolis.—Never—oh! never again, will William Main, employed at the plant of Kingan & Co., meat packers, allow a fat pig to run between his legs. On his little white cot at the City hospital Main now mutters softly in the extreme of disgust. He says mean things about a certain pig—a doomed pig—and he now and then calls himself a "stupid."

It happened in the pens of the packing company. The fat porker had done nothing to distinguish himself from the drove of his fellows. Perhaps he realized this and at a crucial moment in the driving process he decided to go somewhere else than to the slaughter pen. He went hard. Main was in the way. And he stayed there—stayed there with his hands and feet spread wide apart in the most approved pig-stopping attitude.

The pig, however, noted the passage way between Main's legs and dived through it. It wasn't wide enough and in the mixup Main drew the lemon. They carried him away and the white wagon came. Dr. Splinter, of the dispensary, officiated at the ceremonies, which concluded with the announcement that Main had a broken hip.

Prefers Suicide to School.

Chicago.—"I made up my mind to die because my mother tried to force me to go to a private school out of town."

In these few words Irene Glande, 16 years old, residing with her parents on North Paulina street, explained her unsuccessful attempt at self-destruction. She was found reclining on a bench in Lincoln park. Her unusual posture attracted the attention of Park Policeman Pere. He detected the odor of carbolic acid and noted her burned lips. She was taken to the German hospital. When her father and mother arrived she refused to talk.

RECITAL OF HIGH ORDER

Miss Anna L. Case's Rich Soprano Voice Pleases a Critical Audience.

GRAND OPERA SELECTIONS.

Mme. Ohrstrom-Renard and Joseph McIntyre Accompanists—Mr. Gossweiler, 'Cellist.

Before an appreciative audience that thronged the First Presbyterian church, last night, Miss Anna Lucretia Case, soprano, gave her first song recital, assisted by Udo C. Gossweiler, 'cellist; Mme. Ohrstrom-Renard, accompanist for Miss Case, and Joseph McIntyre, accompanist for Mr. Gossweiler. The selections, all classical and including several from Grand Opera, aroused the greatest enthusiasm on the part of the audience.

The program was an ideal one for the occasion and Miss Case was given a flattering reception in the difficult numbers presented. Her voice possesses unusual sweetness, which together with its wide range, gives the young soprano great promise for the future.

The program opened with the aria from "Carmen," by Bizet, which give Miss Case an excellent opportunity to display her talent. Her other numbers in part first included "The Lamp of Love" and "Primavera," Salter, and "Spring," by Henschel, and they were delightfully rendered. In part second Miss Case sang the aria from "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo, in Italian, and showed her mastery of the selection. She concluded the program with three pleasing numbers, "The Danza," by Chaminade; "Songs My Mother Taught Me," Dvorak, and "Summer," Chaminade. In addition she favored the audience with several encores, including "Annie Laurie," all of which she sang in faultless style.

Mr. Gossweiler's part in the program won hearty applause. His work added greatly to the pleasure of the recital. In his first selection was "Sur Le Lac," by Goddard; and he gave "Le Cygene," by Saint Saens, and "Scherzo," by VanGoens, concluding part first. The delightful "Hungarian Rhapsodie," by Popper, together with encores to which he generously responded, all were well received. Arrangements were previously made for an accompanist for him, but at the last moment they failed. Joseph McIntyre, of this city, who was in the audience, very kindly consented to accompany Mr. Gossweiler. His delightful work was a feature not soon to be forgotten.

Miss Case is a pupil of Mme. Renard, who for six years was a pupil of I. A. Berg, of Stockholm. Mr. Berg was the teacher of Jenny Lind. She studied abroad under famous teachers, including Emile Bougeois, conductor opera comique, Paris, and sang Gounod's operas under the composer himself. The recital was given under the direction of Clifford A. Braider, organist of the church.

STREET IMPROVEMENT WORK IS RESUMED WITH FULL FORCE

Activities were resumed this morning on the brick pavement work, Contractor William Foley and three pavers being engaged in laying brick on Watchung avenue. Another paver will reach here this afternoon and if the weather remains as at present it is the intention to cover all the open places where the concrete foundation is laid within the next three or four days.

Contractor Meeker's gang also started in this morning concreting between the tracks on West Front street and it is now confidently believed that the brick work will be completed as originally planned. The large stone which was used for filling on West Front street, between Madison avenue and Somerset street will be put on West End avenue to bring that street up to proper grade. An examination by City Engineer Gavett shows that where the concrete foundation was laid before the recent snow storm, the frost has not affected it in the least.

Aged Woman Fractures Arm.

Mrs. Sherwin, mother of Horace Sherwin, of Washington street, fell down stairs at her home a few days ago and sustained a fracture of the arm. She is now confined to her bed. Owing to her advanced age, being eighty-six, it will probably be a long time before the broken bone knits perfectly. The accident happened while Mrs. Sherwin was descending the stairs and she missed her footing.

William Lawler's Funeral.

The funeral of William Lawler, the young machinist who dropped dead in the Pond shop, will be held at his home on West Third street, Monday morning at 8:30 and in St. Mary's church at 9 o'clock. Burial will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

SUPERINTENDENT MAXSON TALKS TO PUPILS' MOTHERS

Superintendent Henry M. Maxson, of the local schools, addressed the meeting of the Mothers' Association of the Plainfield schools at the high school auditorium yesterday afternoon. His talk was on the value of the work of the association, and he dwelt at length upon the value of organized support by the mothers of the public school pupils, stating that it was a powerful means towards securing the best results by co-operation of teacher and parent. He spoke of the good effects shown by this co-operation so far and urged a closer organization.

There were about fifty parents of local school children present and Mrs. William Sandiford, president of the association; Mrs. Henry M. Maxson, and Mrs. H. C. Phillips, who represented the Plainfield organization at the convention of the State Mothers' Association, reported on the doings of the convention. It was decided that teachers of the schools here be admitted to the association as members, for it is believed that by social relation in meetings, better co-operation between pupil and teacher can be secured.

APPEALS TO COURT TO HELP PAY MONEY

It is seldom that a man is obliged to go to court in order to pay out money which he owes and which he is not only desirous of paying, but actually anxious to pay, yet such is the plight of Benjamin S. Harris, of Clinton avenue.

Mr. Harris owes $548.30, on a contract to build him a home on Clinton avenue, just over the city line in Middlesex county. This amount is primarily due to Apgar Brothers, of Dunellen, who had the contract to build the house, and this amount would have been paid to them last month on the presentation of certain mechanics' lien releases had not notices of various kinds been served on him by men who had furnished materials for the building of the house. These notices claimed that Tuttle Brothers, of Westfield, wanted $727.65 from Apgar Brothers for materials furnished in the construction of the house; that Willard L. Larrabee, of Dunellen, wanted $543 for a similar reason; and that the releases which the J. D. Loizeaux Lumber Company, of this city, and Tuttle Brothers, of Westfield, had signed, were wrongfully obtained.

Later on, Larrabee obtained an assignment of Apgar Brothers' interest in the contract, and on November 27 started suit against Harris to recover the amount due on the contract from Harris to Apgar Brothers. Prior to the bringing of the suit, a meeting of all interested was called by Harris, but none of the parties would recede from the position taken.

Harris, therefore, filed a bill of complaint in the Court of Chancery asking to be allowed to pay the money in dispute into Court and that the various claimants be compelled to then litigate their respective claims to the fund, and made application to Vice Chancellor Emery at Newark on Tuesday for an order allowing him to pay the money into court and directing that an injunction should be issued restraining Larrabee from further prosecuting his suit against Harris. The Vice Chancellor granted the order, and on Thursday the money was paid into court, and an injunction was issued in accordance with the order. Subpoenas were also issued, directing the various claimants to put in their answers to the bill of complaint.

Counsellor J. Henry Crane, of this city, is the lawyer for Harris, and William M. Stillman represents Larrabee.

Reception to Pastor and His Wife.

A reception to Rev. J. O. McKelvey, pastor of Warren chapel, and his wife was held at the new chapel last evening, when many of the parishioners took advantage of the opportunity presented to spend a social hour with the pastor and his wife. In connection with the affair, William D. Dunn, organist at the Crescent Avenue church, gave an organ recital, playing several classic selections, and Miss Alys Mitchell, of Pennington, sang. The affair was under the auspices of the chapel missionary and aid society entertainment committee, of which Mrs. J. H. Snyder is chairman.

New Time-table Issued.

The Plainfield Trust Company has issued a new time-table of trains between Plainfield and New York, corrected to December 1, and will be found very convenient for ready reference. They can be secured at the company's banking institution on Park avenue.

CHRISTMAS BAZAAR ENDS

Delightful Two Day Affair Concluded at All Souls' Church Last Night.

SUPPER SERVED BY WOMEN.

Mrs. A. C. Nickerson Chairman of General Committee—Those Who Assisted at the Booths.

Highly successful as a social affair as well as a means of raising money for the church, the two days' Christmas fair and bazaar held at All Soults' church Thursday and yesterday, concluded last night, when all the booths did a rushing business in the sale of the dainty and useful articles displayed. The affair, which was arranged under the auspices of the Women's Alliance of the church, was in charge of Mrs. A. C. Nickerson, wife of the pastor.

The bazaar was held in the church parlors, which were tastefully decorated with Christmas greens, fir, pine and laurel, which with the decorations of the various booths made a beautiful effect. Last night the feature was a supper, which was served to about a hundred of the parishioners. With Mrs. Nickerson chairman of the supper committee, were Mrs. John C. Otteson, Mrs. H. K. White, Miss Ella Osborne, Miss Mary Wells, Miss Hannah Angell, Miss Alice Reed and Miss Elizabeth White. Those who acted as waitresses were the Misses Inez Tolles, Juna Tolles, Laura Woolston, Grace Woolston, Mary Woolston, Ellen Osgood, Alice Thompson, Louise Nicholl, Miss Newman and Miss Parker.

The various booths were attended by the following women of the church Alliance: Fancy table, Mrs. R. C. Leonard, chairman; Mrs. W. F. Adams, Mrs. W. B. Travell, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Mrs. John C. Otteson, Mrs. L. P. Starkweather, Mrs. Nagle, Mrs. Cohen, Miss Edith Leonard and Miss Alice Thompson. Art table, in charge of Miss Caroline Haviland, chairman, assisted by Mrs. Charles Selden, Mrs. A. C. Wayer, Mrs. C. L. Riley, Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, Mrs. L. P. Gaston, Miss Caroline Hall, Miss Florence Huntington, Miss Ellen Osgood and Miss Mabel VanDeventer. "Goody table," Miss Laura Osgood, chairman; Mrs. Guy Bender, Miss Kathleen Ryder, the Misses Tolles and the Misses Woolston. Candy table, in charge of Miss K. Newman, assisted by Miss Sophronia Durar, Miss Eva Selden, Miss Louise Savage, Miss Louise Nicholl and Miss Parker. At the useful table were Mrs. Stephen Haff, Mrs. L. B. Woolston, Mrs. J. F. Buckle, Mrs. Young, Mrs. Newton, Mrs. Brownell, Mrs. Bemis and Miss Adams. The table was in charge of Mrs. J. O. Osgood, as chairman.

ELIZABETH'S BUSINESS MEN TO MAKE A PROTEST

Manufacturers and shippers of Elizabeth who are largely dependent on the Jersey Central Railroad for the convenient and speedy handling of their goods, in common with shippers at other points along the lines of the Central, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Philadelphia and Reading and the Western Maryland Railroads are seriously disturbed over the threatened withdrawal of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company from the joint freight rate agreement now in operation.

At the suggestion of some of the largest shippers of Elizabeth a special meeting of the executive committee of the Board of Trade considered the matter, and Secretary W. F. Groves has sent to the Interstate Commerce Commission a dispatch which was drawn up by Henry H. Isham and approved by the committee.

When a reply is received from the Interstate Commission the Board of Trade will, if necessary, appoint a committee to go to Washington and present the views of the shippers of this section in detail.

Lecture Postponed to December 20.

Because of unavoidable circumstances it has been found necessary to change the date of the illustrated lecture to be given at the Y. M. C. A. by C. W. McCutchen on "Personal Sights Along the River Nile," from Friday, December 13, to Friday, December 20. The lecture will be given for the benefit of the Faith chapel building fund.

"Ye Olde Fashioned Skule."

The senior class of the Borough High School are completing arrangements for their Christmas celebration on Friday night, December 20. They will give a play entitled "Ye Olde Fashioned Skule," with the usual "roasts" on the members of the class.

WHO GETS THE REWARD?

Col. Dietrich Wants to Give Valuable Keepsake to Man Who Assisted Him.

GOLD WATCH FOR SOMEBODY.

Stranger Who Assisted Colonel to the Sidewalk After He Fell In Street Is the Lucky One.

A reward awaits the person who so kindly assisted the old gentleman who fell while crossing the trolley tracks at the corner of Park avenue and Front street on Monday, December 2. No legal action is to be taken.

This notice, appearing in the advertising columns today, is inserted by Colonel John Deitrich, of Arlington avenue, who wishes to personally express his gratitude to the man who assisted him after a painful fall while crossing Front street Monday afternoon. The reward is a valuable gold watch, which the Colonel has carried for many years. Col. Dietrich, who is well known to many Plainfielders as a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant, feels grateful to this person, whom he believes saved him from injury in the crowded thoroughfare as he was helpless after a fall occasioned by stumbling as he crossed the tracks.

Colonel Dietrich, who is well along in years, was so dazed after the fall that he forgot to thank the man who picked him up and feels that he does not remember his face. He said today that he was eager to find out who did the kind act that he might present him with a handsome gold watch. The timepiece is a valuable gold piece, which the Colonel highly treasures and which he feels is a fitting reward for the courtesy extended to him by the unknown person.

EXPRESS KILLS TWO ON JERSEY CENTRAL BRIDGE

Two men walking east across the New Jersey Central Railroad bridge between Bayonne and Elizabethport last evening were run down by an express train bound west and instantly killed. One man was about forty years old, five feet six inches all and weighed 140 pounds, and the other was about fifty years old, five feet seven inches tall and weighed 150 pounds. The latter carried a Jersey City Hospital patient card numbered 2,398, made out to John McMahan. The bodies were removed to the Bayonne morgue.

SOMERSET COUNCIL HAS A SOCIAL "FAMILY" GATHERING.

Somerset Council, No. 104, Jr. O. U. A. M., held a social "family" gathering in its rooms, last night, in honor of reaching the 300 mark in its membership. Councilor Van Arsdale was in charge and a program prepared was enjoyed by a large gathering of friends. Musical numbers on a variety of instruments were given by Musical Stewart, assisted by Miss Mary Radford; a cornet solo was contributed by Edward Townley and George Watts made an address relative to the aims of the order. Refreshments were served in conclusion.

The affair was arranged by the Good and Welfare committee of the council, composed of J. W. Goff, chairman; Fred Walters, George Rockefeller, F. C. Crozier, Walter Martin, Harry Ising, Fred Soper, Frank Hewlett and Walter C. Walker.

THROWN FROM TROLLEY CAR.

Mrs. James Lyons Quite Badly Hurt In Fall at Watchung Avenue Terminus.

Mrs. James Lyons, of South Second street, was quite badly hurt at 5 o'clock last evening by being thrown from a Netherwood trolley car at the Watchung avenue treminus. She was in the act of alighting when the car suddenly started forward and pitched her to the pavement. She was badly dazed by the fall and had to be taken home in a cab by a friends. Dr. Cregar was called in attendance and she will be under the physicians care for at least a week.

People who saw the accident are loud in their condemnation of the trolley employes. When Mrs. Lyons was thrown she was in need of assistance but the Public Service men left her to whoever might happen along while they busied themselves in getting the names of witnesses for their report.

Rev. L. R. Howard, pastor of Hope chapel, has returned from a visit at the former home of Mrs. Howard in Western New York State, and will preach tomorrow, morning and night.

PEARL STREET EXTENDED

Borough Council Accepts Land for Lengthing Throughfare Considerably.

MAYOR-ELECT AT MEETING.

C. D. Manning's Petition Refused—Recorder's Report Read—Special Session Before New Year.

That Pearl street will soon be extended along the shore of Tier's pond to Chatham street in the borough is now a certainty, for at the North Plainfield Council meeting last night the borough fathers formally accepted the land presented by the Orchard Park Land Improvement Company necessary for the extension of the street. This strip runs along near the side of the pond from near the end of Pearl street on a curve to Chatham street, passing through behind the silk mill. This cut through has long been advocated by property owners of the vicinity and now that land has been secured by the borough the work of extending the street is merely a matter of time.

With only one more meeting of the Council in Mayor Smalley's term, much of last night's business was laid over for the new administration. Mayor-elect Samuel Townsend was present to "learn the ropes." All the members were present except Frank Krewson.

The usual budget of bills was read off and ordered paid and a petition signed by Clinton Smith and other residents of Leland avenue was received asking that Leland avenue be macadamized between the borough line bridge and Mountain avenue. This petition was duly received and filed by the Council and will be laid over for the new administration to attend to. The property owners stated in the petition that Leland avenue between the points mentioned was in bad condition for travel, and during the wet winter weather was like a slough at times.

A petition of C. D. Manning for the erection of a garage was turned down by the borough fathers. Mr. Manning wanted a permit for a garage eighteen by twelve feet to be constructed at Washington street and Prospect place. All the members voted against granting the permit except Councilman Van Winkle.

The recorder's report for the past month showed that during November eighteen arrests have been made "over the brook" and $19 in fines collected. After the disposition of other business of a routine business the Council adjourned for two weeks, when a special meeting, the last in Mayor Smalley's administration, will be held to finish up business of the 1907 Council.

FAGAN DOLLAR DINNER IS ARRANGED FOR JAN. 1

Street and Water Commissioner Andrew Knox, chairman of the executive committee of the Fagan Central Republican Committee, of Hudson county, yesterday engaged Grand View Hall, Jersey City, for the annual dollar dinner of that body, on Monday, January 13. The number of tickets will be limited to 1,000 in order to prevent a repetition of the failure to accommodate some of the 1,500 men who desired to attend the dinner last year.

Governor John Franklin Fort will be asked to speak at the dinner. Senator Everett Colby, of Essex; former Assemblyman Henry Marelli, of Passaic, and other prominent Republicans of the State will be invited as guests of honor.

The question of harmony in the Republican party in Hudson, under a reorganization plan to be approved by Governor Fort, may be discussed at the dinner. Another feature will undoubtedly be a boom for Robert Carey for Prosecutor of Hudson county. Mark M. Fagan will appear at the dinner, as will George L. Record.

It Never Fails.

Miss Adelaide Ball, of Franklin place, lost a seat from her automobile. Of course she advertised the fact in The Daily Press, and Mr. Phillips, of 921 Madison avenue, who found it, naturally saw the advertisement and returned the property to the owner.

Reynolds—Selby.

Miss Sarah E. Selby and Orrington Reynolds, colored, both of this city, were married by Rev. J. T. Diggs at the Mt. Zion A. M. E. church parsonage Thursday night. The couple will reside here.

—The Somerset County Board of Freeholders will hold its regular December meeting at Somerville on Tuesday.

LOCAL ELKS ARRANGING ANOTHER MINSTREL SHOW

Plainfield Lodge, No. 885, B. P. O. E., has taken the preliminary steps to conduct an amateur minstrel show in the New Plainfield theatre early in February. A tentative committee composed of John H. Case, Joseph Noonan and L. A. Bellis has been appointed to take the matter up and report at next Wednesday night's meeting, at which time other committee members will be named.

According to the present plans, the show will consist of an elaborate first part, similar to the one given a year ago last February, which made a decided hit. A couple or more of professional acts will head the olio and others will be contributed by the lodge's talented members. While nothing has assumed tangible shape as yet the committee is determined to make the affair the top-notcher of all local black-face entertainments. As soon as the first report is presented and the committee is completed, the program will be made up and rehearsals commenced.

LINDNER MUST STAND TRIAL FOR BURGLARY

James Lindner, the member of the gang that held up and robbed Joseph Kovact, of Bound Brook, and who was captured in the West End after an exciting chase, was turned over to the Elizabeth police by Chief Kiely yesterday. He will be placed on trial for a burglary committed in Elizabeth six weeks ago and for which he was indicted by the recent Grand Jury. In addition, Lindner will have to answer to the Rahway reformatory authorities for breaking a parole, having been released on chance early in the fall.

The local police have established beyond a doubt that the hold-up of Kovact took place in Middlesex county but they have been put to great inconvenience by failure of the victim to appear at headquarters. He promised after relating his story Thursday night that he would return in the morning but so far he has kept under cover, supposedly because he imagines he will be arrested for riding on the Lehigh Valley train. As a result, it was decided to let the burglarly charge take precedence over Linder's part in the robbery.

In connection with the chase, it has been established by the police that Linder was captured by George H. Apgar, of Bergen street. He joined in the pursuit when the quartette of highwaymen reached Monroe avenue and tackled the one as he was running through a yard on Stebbins place.

LITTLE MOTHER CURRY PROVIDED 600 DINNERS.

"The Little Missionary Day Nursery," New York, of which Miss Sara Curry, of the Netherwood Fresh Air Association, is in charge, had a delightful Thanksgiving Day celebration, when over 600 poor, half-starved mothers and children were made glad by as many bountiful dinners. All united in their praise of the "Little Mother," as Miss Curry is called by the hundreds of poor people with whom she is associated.

Many pathetic instances were noted that day as one after another of the poor mothers and children gathered at the nursery to receive a substantial meal, and it was often remarked that many would go hungry if it had not been for the thoughtfulness of Miss Curry. Mothers and children were seen carrying away bags and baskets that they could hardly lift or get their arms around. There was a generous distribution of fruits, vegetables and other necessary articles of food. At night Miss Curry found she had provided 610 families with good things.

She was so busy watching every bag to see that it was properly filled and delivered to the right one, but nevertheless she was able to detect a woman who was trying to secure a dinner by unfair means. Because the woman told an untruth she was sent away empty handed. Miss Curry is deeply grateful to the kind friends who made possible the hundreds of Thanksgiving dinners.

Spoke on Western Irrigation.

George H. Isaac, of the Plainfield Business College, spoke on irrigation in the west to the pupils of the advanced grades at the Dunellen High School yesterday. Mr. Isaac, who has lived in the west, spoke of the value of irrigation and the introduction of a canal system through the waste and practically desert lands of the southwest. The land has been re-claimed by the farmers and the value per acre greatly increased by the digging of irrigation canals through what was once a district of barren plains, where cactus was the only growing thing.

GOVERNOR-ELECT FORT THE PRINCIPAL SPEAKER

Former Jurist to Deliver Address at Board of Trade Banquet on Tuesday, Jan. 18.

SENATOR FRELINGHUYSEN TOO.

So Also Mayor Fisk and Mayor-elect Townsend Perhaps—Former Mayor Gilbert to Be Toastmaster.

Former Judge J. Franklin Fort, the Governor-elect of New Jersey, will make his first public speech, following the convening of the Legislature, in Plainfield. The jurist has consented to appear as the principal speaker at the Plainfield Board of Trade's annual meeting to be held on Tuesday night, January 18, four days after the New Jersey solons begin their sessions. His remarks will be of State interest.

Next only to the Governor-elect, himself, will be State Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, the doughty man from Somerset; he who is the author of the model pure food law and the much copied automobile statute of New Jersey. The Governor has accepted the invitation; the Senator has not as yet but there is no question that he will be here again. Last year "Uncle Joe" (now "Papa Joe") made a hit at the banquet when Thomas N. McCarter, of the P. S. C., was the principal speaker. His speech was so good that the Board wants a second helping.

Former Mayor Alexander Gilbert, president of the New York Clearing House Association, who next to Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou is the most important figure in American finance, will act as toastmaster. Mr. Gilbert is chairman of the committee on arrangements for the affair and some interesting remarks are expected from him. Then there will be Mayor Charles Joel Fisk—no Plainfield gathering would be complete without the progressive mayor of a progressive municipality. And there will be others to interest the two hundred or so diners who will make the gathering a notable one in the history of the queenly city of New Jersey.

The banquet will be held at the Casino unless the committee changes its plans. This committee consists of former City Mayor Alexander Gilbert, chairman of the bi-municipal consolidation commission; former Borough Mayor William L. Saunders, papa of the consolidation movement and president of the Ingersoll-Rand Company; A. E. Force, the wide-awake citizen; Eugene M. Laing, the veteran member of the body, and Mayor-elect Samuel Townsend, of North Plainfield. While not down on the program, Mr. Townsend will be expected to outline his policies as the next chief executive of the borough.

REFUSES RECTOR'S CLAIM.

Vice-Chancellor Howell Will Not Allow $4,487 Which Priest Says He Advanced.

Vice-Chancellor James E. Howell has refused to allow the claim of Father Szeneczy, rector of St. Ladislaus' Hungarian Catholic church at New Brunswick, for $4,487, for moneys the rector claimed to have advanced out of his personal funds to Thomas Wearren & Sons, of this city, the contractors who built the church. About $11,000 was due on the contract, and as there were a number of other claims against the contractors, the aggregate being more than the $11,000, the money was paid into the Court of Chancery, and for several days the vice-chancellor has been taking testimony for the proving of claims.

All the claims were allowed with the exception of that of the rector, and the vice-chancellor disallowed that on the ground that no adequate evidence had been advanced to show that the moneys paid were not church funds, instead of personal funds. An appeal will be taken from this decision, but if it is sustained all the other claims will probably be paid in full.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

The fair and bazaar under the auspices of the Sunshine Guild of Holy Innocents' church opened yesterday afternoon at Friendship Hall, New Market. In the evening, as at the opening, a large attendance of local people thronged the booths where pretty and useful things were being sold. The hall presents a gala appearance, set about with gay booths. There is a fancy work booth, belt and collar booth, doll booth, "Harpers' Bazaar," cake and candy booth, apron booth, and booth where household articles are sold. All are in charge of the members of the guild. A feature is the automobile message delivery, a novel substitute for the church fair grab bag. The bazaar will continue this afternoon and tonight.

In memoriam of the late Miss Mary E. Burdette, secretary and superintendent of the Chicago Training Home, a special service was held yesterday afternoon at the First Baptist church, under the auspices of the Ladies' Mission Circle of the church. The services were impressive in their simplicity, and a feature was the address by Miss Gertrude Robins, at one time a pupil of Miss Burdette. Miss Burdette was connected with the Women's Home Missionary Society work for more than thirty years.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered at the First Baptist church in connection with the regular morning service tomorrow, and on this occasion opportunity will be given new members to ally themselves with the church.

The freezing nights since the snow storm have kept the streets in a condition to make sleighing possible and out in the country hereabouts the sleighing is fairly good.

The board of trustees of the Presbyterian church will hold their regular monthly meeting tonight at the home of the president, Louis Schneider.

STATE NEWS BRIEFS.

Through cars over the East Shore Line between Ocean City and Philadelphia, via Pleasantville, will be in operation in a few weeks.

A verdict for $3,000 damages was returned by a jury in the Circuit Court at Paterson yesterday afternoon in favor of Frederick Calnar, who brought suit against the East Jersey Pipe Company for injuries sustained while employed by the company.

A committee has been appointed from the membership of the Camden County Bar Association to arrange a dinner of the South Jersey bar to be given in honor of Justice Charles G. Garrison, who will have completed twenty years' service on Supreme Court bench next month.

Entering her bedroom yesterday, Mrs. James Cain found a negro ransacking the bureau. The thief dashed by her and down the stairs. Peter Vantyne, of Trenton Junction, brother of Mrs. Cain, happened to be in the hall and grappled with the negro. A fierce struggle ensued, but Vantyne held the culprit until the arrival of a policeman. The thief gave his name as William Johnson, of Virginia.

At the Newark Bay Club, Bayonne, last evening, a meeting of prominent young men of Bayonne was held to further arrangements for the reorganization of Company I, Fourth Regiment, N. G. N. J. Philip Guise, who recently resigned as captain of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment, N. G. N. Y., will command the new company. There are so many applications for membership that a waiting list will be kept. An armory will be erected and the social features will include a glee club, bowling, basketball and shooting teams.

When the morning freight over the West Jersey and Seashore Railroad reached the Wildwood station and stopped there yesterday it was not known that, though a broken coupling, it had dropped the caboose and one car up the road. Meanwhile the caboose and car had gained a speed of fully thirty miles an hour on the grade, and, without warning, crashed into the halted train. The impact was such as to drive Conductor Herman Cartwright and Flagman John Wick with terrible force head first against the front of the car in which they were working, and they were picked up unconscious. It is feared that they are seriously hurt.

EXCISE BOARD DISMISSES CASE.

Alleged Screen Law Violator Escapes on Technicality—More Farces Anticipated.

Some persons at Elizabeth are wondering if the prosecution of the sixty-seven indictments against Elizabeth saloon-keepers for violating the screen clause of the "bishops' law" will degenerate into a farce. Their speculation in this respect is due to the action yesterday afternoon of Elizabeth's Excise Board, which discussed the indictment found by the Grand Jury against Jacob Kiefer, who runs a saloon at 586 Elizabeth avenue.

The complaining witnesses were Detectives Matson and O'Brien, of the Elizabeth force, who testified that on a Sunday last June Kiefer had a mosquito netting stretched across his front window. Samuel Schleimer, for the defendant, asked the policemen if they had gone up close to the window, whether they could not see the interior of the place. Their reply was "Yes." Then Mr. Schleimer asked that the charge be dismissed, which was promptly done.

The lawyer then served notice on the board that it could not try persons to whom it had granted new licenses for an alleged offense committed five months ago under their old license.

$36,000 ICE PLANT FOR WESTFIELD SOON

The Westfield Ice and Cold Storage Company has been incorporated under the laws of the State of New Jersey with a capital stock of $50,000. The incorporators are George E. Perry and George L. Delatour, of Westfield, and Alfred Warsnop, of New York.

The new company proposes to build a $36,000 plant capable of producing twenty-five tons of plate ice daily, and to have sixteen thousand feet of cold storage space. One-half of the entire output of the plant has already been contracted for at profitable prices.

It is proposed to locate the plant near Westfield, and several sites along the line of the Central Railroad are now being considered, and a choice will probably be made in a few days. It is proposed to have the plant ready for business before next warm season begins.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

When George M. Cohan, the youngest and most popular of American dramatists and composers, was informed by Klaw & Erlanger that he was to play all last summer at the Amsterdam theatre in New York, he set himself to work to produce a starring vehicle which would be the biggest hit of his career. He wrote and composed "The Honeymooners" and made the greatest triumph of his crowded life playing throughout the heated season on Broadway to capacity at $2 prices. "The Honeymooners" comes to the New Plainfield theatre this afternoon and tonight with the original Broadway production. It will be presented by a powerful cast of metropolitan favorites assisted by forty of the cleverest and prettiest chorus girls that ever left New York.

Nothing in all modern times has advanced more rapidly than naval engineering and warfare. Ever since the public has been impressed with the fact that a nation's life depends on its navy, it has been becoming more and more interested. But as it makes dull reading and as very few have had any opportunity to inspect a monster battleship at close range, most of us have, at least, only a vague sense of its magnitude and power. Therefore Lyman H. Howe's moving pictures of a great naval attack at the New Plainfield theatre next Thursday evening, will prove not only distinctly novel and instructive, but will gratify much natural curiosity. To many minds, the series will impart the first true and full conception of naval realities, for however much we may have read of them, nothing conveys ideas more clearly than seeing actualities. The pictures were secured only through special facilities given by the Lords of the Admiralty, England, and as Mr. Howe controls the sole American rights for the greater portion, they are exhibited in this country by him.

Al. H. Wilson's wonderful voice will be heard in this city this season when he presents the new "Metz in the Alps" for the enjoyment of our theatre-goers. During the action of the play Mr. Wilson will sing several new songs that are sure to be played on every piano in the city after his engagement. He will be here Monday night, December 16.

$8,500 DAMAGES FOR ARM.

Lackawanna Railroad Loses Suit Despite Introduction of Miniature Train in Trial.

A verdict of $8,500 was rendered in favor of Adelburtus Konkeski in his case against the Lackawanna Railroad by a jury in the Supreme Court circuit, Newark, last evening. Koneski sued for $20,000 for the loss of an arm while working for the railroad.

In attempting to show negligence on the part of Koneski during the trial the railroad reproduced the scene of the accident, introducing a miniature freight train under full steam in the court rooms. Attorney General Robert H. McCarter appeared for the railroad company.

Is Too Much Money Harmful to American Women?

"When our foreign critics speak of the American woman they have in mind the wives and daughters of unwisely chivalrous men, who have blindly allowed their women folk to pursue ignorant and half-baked ideals of emancipation."

"Almost without exception, her attempts at a career have been futile, and often they have been notably, even pathetically, ridiculous."

"Lacking all vital contact with life, ignorant of all the deeper wells of human impulse, her mind and her very good looks are as superficial and as trivial as her activities."

HAPPY WOMEN.

Plenty of Them In Plainfield, and Good Reason For It.

Wouldn't any woman be happy,
After years of backache suffering,
Days of misery, nights of unrest,
She finds relief and cure?

No reason why any Plainfield reader

Should suffer in the fact of evidence like this:

Mrs. Margaret Reville, of 732 West Third street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "For a long time I was troubled from a lame back and never found anything which gave me relief until I got Doan's Kidney Pills at Randolph's Pharmacy. In a short time after taking them I felt their good effects, and from then on I improved steadily. I gave a statement at that time telling what Doan's Kidney Pills did for me, and am glad to confirm everything I have previously said regarding the curative properties of this remedy. I used several other medicines to cure the lameness and aching in my back but got not relief until I took Doan's Kidney Pills. I give Doan's all the credit for my cure."

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

FOOTBALL.

John Mahew has been elected captain of the football team at Brown University for next year.

Lehigh University "L" football team of the last season have elected Garret DeF. Spiers, right halfback of the eleven, as next year's captain.

The Cornell football authorities think it is high time, according to report, that a game with Pennsylvania be played in Ithaca. For a number of years all of the Pennsylvania-Cornell battles have been decided on Franklin Field.

The Ithacans figure that there is too big a percentage of victory in Pennsylvania's favor by playing on the latter's field all the time, and before agreeing to another contest will, it is said, insist on a return game in Ithaca. Such a course hardly would be welcome at Pennsylvania, where the Thanksgiving game has a sentimental and financial value, and in case the Quakers agree to the home and home proposal of Cornell some other Thanksgiving battle on Franklin Field would probably be sought.

The Cornell soccer football team has received communications from the Paulosta Football League of San Paulo, Brazil, asking for a series of game to be played at San Paulo next June and July. The Brazilians offer to pay the expenses of fifteen men with the exception of transportation. They intimate, however, that a trip like that proposed would net Cornell's team at least $10,000 on account of the great popularity of the game and the big interest that an international match would arouse.

The Cornell soccer team is made up almost entirely of foreign students and there are several South Americans on it. It may be for that reason that the Brazilians expect that their offer will be taken up. However, it is rather unlikely that this will be done, because it would be very much out of the way of some of the students to remain so long after college closes in another country. They would be able to represent Cornell all right even if college were closed, on the same principle that the crew rows at Poughkeepsie with some men in it who have received their degrees and are not really in college.

GOLF.

Clubs in the Metropolitan Golf Association to apply for the amateur or open championships of 1908 have been notified by Secretary Calkins to send in their requests prior to the annual meeting on December 10. Clubs that have elected new secretaries should also send in the names of the officials to the secretary.

At the annual meeting of the Sound Beach Golf and Country Club, held at the Murray Hill Hotel, this week, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mortimer B. Foster; vice-president, George E. Marks; treasurer, George A. Hurty; secretary, Percy D. Adams; captain, Richard A. White; governors, Henry B. Cochcu, Andrew J. Post, George B. Palmer, James W. White, Frank J. Marion.

The report of the treasurer showed a substantial balance on hand. The governors reported the largest membership in the history of the club and also that there were fourteen candidates awaiting election. The greens committee through its chairman, Andrew B. Newcombe, reported that the first nine holes on the new course had been put in shape and would be ready for play by May 1. The house committee reported that the new club house was being redecorated throughout and that the new piazzas would be erected and new locker room installed by April 1. The general sports committee reported the installation of pigeon traps and that shoots were being arranged with other clubs; that a skating pond was being flooded and that curling matches would be held as soon as the ice was in condition. In fact all of the branches of the club's activities were shown to be in a most healthy and promising shape. A club dinner is scheduled to take place in the new clubhouse on New Year's eve as one of the winter festivities.

A PROSPEROUS GRANGE.

Raritan Valley Organization Hears Reports and Elects Officers at Its Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Raritan Valley Grange was held Thursday in its hall at South Branch, and the reports of the different officers indicated that the organization is in a prosperous condition. During the past year the membership has been increased to twenty and ground has been broken for a grange building to be erected at a cost of $2,000.

Plainfield, N. J., December 7, 1907.

Foraker says he is "out for the Presidency." Well, was he ever "in" for it?

No, Constant Reader, the Board of Trade has no connection with The Knockers' Mutual Admiration Society.

Fort, Frelinghuysen and Forward will be the keynote at the Board of Trade banquet. Pretty good combination!

If it takes half a year to lay some brick pave, how long would it take to get a drink if the construction of municipal water works were started? Please confine your answers to 10,000 words and address them to Mr. John Doe, the man responsible for city contract delay.

The proposition to purchase the Smalley building for a city hall is one worthy of the mature consideration of the Common Council. It is situated in an ideal location, and would be a good investment in every way. President Marshall, of the Board of Trade, should continue his efforts to have the city obtain title.

How in the name of common sense can the Common Council approve a five years' contract with the P. S. C. for lighting? Such an agreement would never meet with public approval; one year is conducive to better service and it would not make any legal tangles should there be a consolidation of city and borough in the near future.

Mayor Smalley's suggestion that the powers of the mayor of Plainfield be enlarged so that he become a part of the Common Council is well meant, but hasn't this country had enough of executives usurping the offices of legislative bodies? The constitutions of the United States, of the various States and charters of cities, separate these co-ordinate departments of government for the well being of the people. A mayor is elected to execute the ordinances; not to make them.

We will give him credit for having the courage of his convictions and for having the reputation of being the best mayor North Plainfield ever had, but when Mr. Smalley advocates the formation of a new county with Plainfield as its centre he is discussing the impossible. There is no argument for a new county, but there are plenty of good sound reasons why Plainfield and North Plainfield should be consolidated. That is the aim of all well meaning citizens on both sides of "the brook" and it is wasting time to talk of any other plan.

AUTOMOBILIST AIDS VICTIM.

Gives All His Money to Farmer He Had Hit After Taking Him to a House.

Montclair, Dec. 7.—While George B. Camfield, a farmer of Cedar Grove, and his wife were driving to a funeral along a lonely country road their carriage was run into by an automobile. Camfield was thrown out of the vehicle, which was badly damaged. The farmer was knocked unconscious in the road. The horse ran away, but the farmer's wife held unto the reins and stopped the animal before it had gone far.

The automobilist picked up Camfield, taking him and his wife to a hamlet, where he presented to the injured man $20, all the money he had with him. Camfield was badly cut about the scalp, but not seriously injured. The automobilist did not give his name, but promised to further recompense the farmer.

PRINCETON DEBATERS WIN FOR YALE MEN.

In the fourteenth annual debate between Princeton and Yale, held in Alexander Hall, Princeton, last night, Princeton won after a long deliberation on the part of the judges. It is years since such interest has been shown in this field of college activity and the immense auditorium was packed with enthusiastic undergraduates and outsiders.

The question discussed is one of timely interest, for in his latest message to Congress President Roosevelt took some pains to express his views on it. The subject was: "Resolved, That a law should be enacted providing that, in case of personal injury to a workman arising out of, and in the course of employment, his employer should be liable for adequate compensation and shall not set up contributory negligence on the part of a fellow servant as a defense."

Yale took the affirmative side and Princeton the negative. The Elis were represented by W. P. Armstrong, 1908, law; N. B. Jamison, 1908, law, and W. W. Wynkoop, 1908. For Princeton, Thomas B. Clark, 1908; Morton H. Fry, 1909, and Jesse Herman, 1910, spoke well.

The judges were Dr. J. B. Clark, of Columbia University; Dr. J. M. Taylor, president of Vassar College, and Charles S. Crossman, of the Haverford Grammar School.

All the arguments were clean cut and to the point, the rebuttals being especially brilliant. The decision came after many restless minutes.

Sues Wife's Parents for $5,000.

Ferdinand F. Sommerkorn, who was recently released from jail in Newark on a promise to find work in order to pay allimony to his wife pending the outcome of her suit for divorce, yesterday began suit for $5,000 damages against George and Esther Dalzell, of No. 130 Hudson street. They are the parents of his wife and he charges them with the alienation of her affections.

GUARANTEED CURES OR NO CHARGE!

Bernarr Macfadden, who is to lecture at The Casino on the evening of Wednesday, December 11th, believes that to remain in a diseased condition is an actual sin against yourself. He believes first, that you have no business to be sick and second, that you most certainly have no excuse for remaining so. No otherr sanatoriums in the world can show the curative results that Mr. Macfadden is able to show with patients at his two sanatoriums at Battle Creek, Mich., and his two sanatoriums at Physical Culture City, New Jersey. No other institutions have ever dared to guarantee the cure of a disease. This, Mr. Macfadden is willing to do. If you become a patient at any one of his sanatoriums, he is willing to guarantee a satisfactory change in your condition in a reasonable length of time, and should there be a failure in a guarantee case, you may get your board, treatment and all attention absolutely free of charge.

E. A. Leubke.

The photograph herewith is that of Mr. E. A. Luebke, of Milwaukee, Wis., a sufferer from neurasthenia. In three weeks after entering one of Mr. Macfadden's sanatoriums, Mr. Luebke gained 100 per cent. in all 'round strength and 15 pounds in weight—all good, solid, substantial tissue. Mr. Luebke believes that the time and money spent at the sanatorium was the best investment he had ever made. He left the institution a perfectly well man. Mr. Macfadden's treatment for neurasthenia is always most successful. Those who speak loudest in his praise are those who have been cured of this common disease. In this strenuous age, almost anyone who is in business is subject to it. Mr. Macfadden's treatment for neurasthenia made a well man of Wm. T. Hutchings, of Muskegee, I. T., who said upon leaving the sanatorium, "I feel better than I have for years." The names of any number of additional patients could be given if space would permit.

Neurasthenia is a disease that practising physicians have been struggling with for years, but it seems to be beyond remedy by drugs. Physical culture methods offer the only sensible methods for overcoming its ravages.

If you are sickly, or if you have a friend whose health is not as it should be, why not restore the health which has been lost, by getting in touch with Mr. Macfadden. He comes to this city December 11th—almost to your very door—to lecture on Wednesday evening at the Casino. You may consult with Mr. Macfadden while he is in town, if you so desire, or you can write to him at his main office, Flat Iron Building, New York City, where he will be pleased to give you, by mail, a free diagnosis of your case. If you call on him at his Hotel, while his time is limited, he will, undoubtedly, be able to see you. It seems as though every ailing person in Plainfield should accept Mr. Macfadden's offer of a guaranteed cure, or no charge. How could the matter of renewed health possibly be put on a more certain basis?

Bernarr Macfadden.

Physical Culture's Apostle, Will Lecture.

What will undoubtedly prove to be one of the most interesting lectures of the season will be delivered by Bernarr Macfadden at The Casino next Wednesday evening, December 11, on "Physical Culture." In this talk Mr. Macfadden, who is recognized throughout the entire country as one of the most prominent authorities on physical culture and physical culture methods, will explain in a simple and plain talk what physical culture stands for and what it can do for any one and everybody.

There is no modern science, according to the announcement sent out by Mr. Macfadden, which has gained such rapid headway and which has attained more public attention than the new and distinctly modern science of "Physical Culture."

In the past twenty-five years there have been many fads and fancies that have sprung up and that have during that time attracted more or less public attention. Physical culture has outgrown all the other faddisms and radical ideas that have flourished for a few short years and then have perished, because of the many theories that have been advanced physical culture alone has met the test and produced results. Results alone has been the standard by which all accomplishments have been measured in the past decade.

Persons who are desirous of learning what real physical culture means will have a rare opportunity in listening to the Bernarr Macfadden lecture next Wednesday night. Mr. Macfadden, who is the founder of the modern science of physical culture, in his lecture will speak at length upon the birth, the growth and purposes of this most useful and popular science, which relates to healthy and properly developed bodies. Reserved seats are for sale at Armstrong's pharmacy.

R. R. TAX DECISION SOON

State Board of Equalization Anticipate Early Action by Court of Errors.

LENGTHY STATEMENT ISSUED.

Taxpayers, Say the Board, Should See that the Money is Not Used Extravagently.

The State Board of Equalization of Taxes yesterday issued a statement which intimates that an early decision of the Court of Errors on the railroad tax appeals may be expected. The statement also goes into the matter of increase in valuations. Following is the statement:

"The decision upon the railroad tax rates is hoped for soon. The Court of Errors and Appeals feels that the importance of this subpect demands as prompt a decision as possible, and they may take an interim adjournment in order to make a speedy announcement.

"The law passed, which increased the taxes of railroads during the past two years, authorizes the taxation of second class railroad property by the local assessors at local rates in the various municipalities, and requires the main highway of the road, never exceeding a hundred feet in width, to be taxed at the average rate of the State for State and school purposes. This increased the tax of the main stem about three and a half times and brings a revenue to the State and schools of from $3,250,000 to $3,500,000 per annum.

"The railroads are strongly opposed to this method of taxation and are fighting it through the courts of last resort, and it is said will appeal it to the Supreme Court of the United States.

"Notwithstanding this strong opposition of the railroads some of the papers are falsely claiming that the present scheme of taxation is a railroad measure. The fact that the railroads are fighting it is a sufficient refutation of this claim. The failure of the railroads to pay their taxes, pending litigation, deprives the taxpayers of the benefits of the revenue.

"When this is received, taxes will be materially lowered, as the taxes on the stem and second classes railroad property together amount to about one-sixth of the total taxes of the State raised for county, local, school and all other purposes.

"There has been some increase in valuations in order to assess all property equitably and according to the constitutional standards. Equality in valuation is necessary in order that all property should be treated alike and that every taxing district should pay its fair share of the county tax or the State school tax.

"Where property is assessed at different percentages of its value, some taxing districts in the county pay more than their share or less than their share of the county tax, some counties pay more than their share or less than their share of the State school tax.

"The equalization of valuations remedies this evil, but cannot increase the taxes. Increase in taxes is due to the increased expenditures of the municipalities. Careful economy in municipal government will relieve the burden of taxation. No taxing system, however equitable, can prevent an increase of taxes where the expenditures are continually increasing. The State is contributing large sums annually to the payment of local taxes, and when the railroad taxes are paid, this dividend to the municipalities will be largely increased. The taxpayers should see that it is used for their benefit and not for extravagant expenditures."

'Ware the Imposter.

Residents of the East End have complained to the police of an attractive young woman dressed in black who has been working a panhandling game for the past two or three days. Her plan is to approach someone she knows by name and ask for a quarter under the pretext that she lost her pocketbook. She succeeded in getting quite a few dollars before some of her victims got "wise" by comparing notes.

TRIED TO POISON FAMILY.

Jury Finds George Magyar Guilty of Putting Rat Poison in Pot of Cabbage.

Trenton, Dec. 7.—The jury in the case of George Magyar, charged with attempting to poison his wife and family, after sixteen hours of consideration, yesterday returned a verdict of guilty. This makes the second trial for Mogyar. In the first trial the jury stood 11 to 1 for conviction.

The testimony showed that on the day in question Magyar asked his wife to send for some beer, and when she refused to do so he became angry. Magyar's daughter, Mary, testified she saw her father standing near a pot of cabbage. A little later she and her mother discovered ratpoison mixed with the cabbage. The girl testified that on a previous occasion her father took an ax to be ground and asserted that he intended to kill Mrs. Magyar.

THE NEW YORK & NEW JERSEY TELEPHONE CO.

READ THIS!

From a Prominent New York Newspaper:

"In this hustling, bustling age of ours, where every second has a commercial value, the telephone plays a most important part. Without it the activities of the day would not be possible and business would proceed at the sober pace which characterized it some fifty years ago. And yet although most people will realize the truth of these assertions, few appreciate the enormous void which would be left were the telephone to be suddenly wiped out of existence."

TOLLES FOR PRESIDENT OF '08 COMMON COUNCIL

An adjourned meeting of the Common Council will be held Monday night to begin to finish the business for the year before turning over the reins of the city to the governing body for 1908. It is possible that several meetings will be necessary this month to wind up affairs for the year. The new body which assumes charge at 12 o'clock noon on New Year's Day, will have three new faces—Robert E. Hall, of the Second ward, who succeeds Councilman D. F. Ginna; Frederick Mygatt, of the Third ward, who succeeds President Leslie M. Daniel, and H. F. Suydam from the Fourth ward, who takes Councilman Charles C. Randolph's place in that ward, as the latter will be a member at large from the Third ward.

The new Common Council will be composed of the following members: First ward, R. I. Tolles and William L. Gloak; Second ward, Francis L. Montgomery, H. D. Hibbard and Robert E. Hall; Third ward, W. S. Tyler, C. C. Randolph and Frederic E. Mygatt; Fourth ward, Herbert Buxton, Frank DeW. Randolph and H. F. Suydam.

The fact that President Daniel retires this year is a source of regret to every member, all of whom speak in the highest praise of his service to the city. He has been president of the body two terms and in the interim he has performed faithful service on the floor, as chairman of the finance committee, as well as a member of other committees.

Another retiring member whose services have been appreciated is George P. Mellick, of the Second ward. As a result of the changes, this ward is the heaviest loser, both Mr. Ginna and Mr. Mellick retiring. They have been active in city affairs since entering the council, the former as chairman of the street committee, and Mr. Mellick as a member of other important committees.

It is a little early to present a slate of next year's president and the chairmen of the various committees, but from present indications there promises to be a number of important changes. Just who will get the positions on the important committees is problematical now, but before the slate is completed there is sure to be a lively contest on the part of the hold-over members. Of course, the new members are not expected to get the choice plums, and as a rule they never do. However, there may be a change in the regular program next year.

Among those mentioned for the presidency is Mr. Tolles. Like Mr. Daniel he has presided over the council sessions before and is acquainted with the duties of the position. However, it is not known that Mr. Tolles would be willing to take the place again. If not there will probably be several other candidates for the chair.

COUNTY TAX CLERK DEADLOCK UNBROKEN.

The contest over the appointment of a secretary to the County Tax Board to succeed William R. Townsend, who resigned to become local tax collector, has reached a stage where neither side is inclined to give way, and there is little probability of an appointment being made for several days. Most of the men in the county organization stand behind Lawyer Henry H. Drake, of Elizabeth, mainly because he has been a party worker, while the president of the county tax board holds out for G. Barrett Littell, also of Elizabeth.

Friends of Littell, it is said, have been trying to get members of the organization to endorse their man.

As the duties of the office are being satisfactorily fulfilled by the temporary clerk, Edward Taylor, the two factions will have plenty of time to fight the matter out.

"I have nothing to say on the subject," said Caleb C. Pollard, of the County Board of Taxation, when questioned as to filling of the vacant place of secretary of the board yesterday afternoon.

"You see we are not in any particular hurry about it now," he said in answer to further questions, "as Mr. Taylor, who hase come in to help us temporarily, has worked into the business very nicely, and—anyhow, we are not particular about making a selection until after the twentieth of the month."

COUNTY BUILDERS RE-ELECT JOHNSTON AS PRESIDENT.

The Master Builders' Association of Westfield, Cranford, Roselle, Scotch Plains and vicinity, at its annual meeting for election of officers at Westfield chose the following: President, William D. Johnston, Scotch Plains; vice-president, C. I. Bell, Cranford; corresponding secretary, Charles H. French, Westfield; financial secretary, C. E. Blakeslee, Cranford; treasurer, Ernest W. Wilcox, Westfield; trustees, W. I. Carpenter, J. N. Meeker, D. Krier; delegates to State Association, E. N. Hussey, J. N. Meeker, William D. Johnston, J. W. Goodliffe, C. E. Blakeslee, C. Wilcox, L. L. Loveland; members executive committee, masons, William D. Johnston; carpenters, C. L. Bell; plumbers, J. W. Goodliffe; painters, A. S. Flagg; electricians, B. A. Doyle.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

Under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the First M. E. church a Christmas sale will be held in Vincent chapel Thursday afternoon, December 12, and Friday afternoon and evening, December 13.

The new Bible class started at the Y. W. C. A. Thursday night was largely attended and much enthusiasm was shown. Miss Mary Hubbell is the teacher and the class is studying the Gospel by John.

The choir of the First M. E. church will give a special musical service tomorrow night comprising excerpts from "The Creation." The pastor, Rev. A. C. McCrea will give a short talk on the life of Haydn, the composer.

C. W. McCutchen will exhibit more than 100 views at the illustrated lecture to be given by him at the Y. M. C. A. Friday night, December 13, on "Personal Sights Along the River Nile." The affair will be for the benefit of Faith chapel building fund.

Beginning Monday lunches will be served at the Y. W. C. A. from 11:30 to 1:30. Home cooking and home surroundings are expected to attract many business women. During the week preceding Christmas meals will be served both at noon and in the evening.

WHY NOT?

"I wish you would preach on Labor and Capital," said my Wall street friend. "What with strikes and Standard Oil fines and Railroad limitations and Presidential interferences, things are getting into a frightful tangle. Why not help straighten it out?"

"I would, if I were younger," said I; "but the longer I live the less inclination I feel to rush in where angels fear to tread. It's true, the situation is complicated; but I'm not sure, not absolutely sure, that I am wise enough to better it. Do you happen to remember the name of the old philosopher who wrote:

"All things I thought I knew, but now confess
The more I know I know, I know the less!"

But though a sermon may not be forthcoming, the preacher has his thoughts.

On the one hand, it looks as if the Capitalists were to blame. Trusts and Combines involving oftentimes the ruthless slaughter of small operators and defiance of just laws cannot always go unwhipt. The right of Capitalists to combine for mutual advantage is not questioned; but when they presume upon that right to wrong the people it is for the Government to say "Thus far and no further." The Government has thus spoken, once and again, in the enactment of legal restraints; and once and again those laws have been broken. The penalty must be paid sooner or later; sooner, the people are saying. It is vain to reply "You will destroy the commercial prosperity of the country," et cetera. The people rule and they are beginning to insist that equal justice, a justice that cannot always be measured by a mulcting in dollars and cents, shall be measured out to great and small law breakers.

On the other hand, the Labor Unions seem determined on their own ruin. "Whom the gods destroy they first make mad." It is scarcely necessary to enumerate the evils for which Labor-Unionism stands, evils that militate less against Capital than against labor itself. Everybody knows them. A householder cannot have his door painted without running up against them. They are "rank and smell to heaven." A man indicted for murder, perpetrated in the sacred name of labor, may be cleared of the charge and exploited as a hero; the evidence adduced in the case, however, stands as in letters of fire. That cannot be blotted out. The right of combination in the Third Estate is not denied; but the right to use that combination against the laws or to the injury of any man is a proposition that must be fought to a finish before we are through with it.

So there is wrong on both sides; and what will come of it? No near settlement need be looked for. The controversy is as old os sin, and will go on until by the influence of the Golden Rule, sin is shaken out of the world, and the selfishness of the old maxim "Look out for Number One" is supplanted by the magnanimous precept of the Gospel "Bear ye one another's burdens."

In the meantime what is to be gained by saying platitudes in the pulpit about it? But it is good to reflect that God is in command of human affairs. We are perplexed; but he knows the end from the beginning. The same wisdom that brought order out of chaos, is calmly solving all problems and rolling the world on toward the Golden Age.

And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

—David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D., in The Christian Intelligencer.

Boys' Deparement Lecture.

The first of a series of six lectures being arranged for by Boys' Secretary L. A. Soule, of the Y. M. C. A., will be held in the association auditorium Tuesday evening, when W. Wellington Massee will speak on "Cowboy Life on the Plains." Mr. Massee, who is now living in New York city, was for many years a "cow puncher" on the western plains, and will tell the boys some of his experiences.

FLOOD OF PETITIONS RECEIVED BY KEAN

Petitions on various subjects are being received by Senator John Kean at Washington. He has received protests against the copyright bill from Lauter & Co., of Newark; A. Brunton, of Jersey City, and A. C. Albertson, of Jersey City. Petitions in favor of the bill have been received from Paul C. Zimmerman, of Morristown, and H. E. Minchmore, of Rutherford. The Senator has received petitions from the Montclair and Plainfield Decorators and Painters' Unions, the Master Painters' Association, of Newark, and the New Jersey State Association of Decorators advocating a law for pure paints similar to the pure food law.

Senator Kean has received a petition from the State Association of Presidential Postmasters of New Jersey advocating a parcels post and postal savings banks.

The survivors of the Twelfth New Jersey Volunteers want the law amended relative to the mustering in of officers to include all to whom commissions were received, some of whom were not mustered in when the war ended in 1865.

Owners of automobiles in New Jersey will be interested in the bill which Representative Cocks, of New York, has introduced in the House. It provides that a federal license for touring may be obtained by owners of cars in any State, in addition to the regular State license, and in that way much annoyance, as well as unnecessary expense will be saved. The bill has the backing of the American Automobile Association, and it is based on interstate traffic.

Representative Hughes will serve on the Democratic National Committee as the member from New Jersey, his choice having had the approval of his colleagues in the House.

AMUSEMENTS.

Proctor's theatre, Newark, week of December 9—America's most clever actor's, Robert Hilliard, and company in an intensely dramatic little play, entitled "As a Man Sows;" Kitty Traney in her original juggling and sporting act, introducing her beautiful pony and dog in tricks; Matthews and Ashley in their extremely funny offering, "A Smash-up in Chinatown;" the Dixon Brothers in a good comedy musical act—Jolly John Larkins in a breezy monologue, Annie and Effie Connelly in a lively singing and dancing turn; the Raymond Trio in excerpts from Grand Opera, with special scenery, The Chamroy's comedy acrobats and a new series of the motion pictures.

Proctor's Elizabeth theatre for the week of December 9 will be another corker. Miss Ruth Allen and company in "We Need the Money;" Gallando, the clay modeller, America's Comedy Four, the drollest act in Vaudeville, the Village Choir, Majestic Trio, funny colored comedians, Norton and Russell, character comedians. The motion pictures and the extra attraction, the Sisters Macart, the world famous wire artists.

Several years ago a thousand of the leading druggists in the United States formed a co-operative company and as a result the famous "Rexall Remedies" were put on the market. Dudley Miller, the Park avenue druggist, carries a full line and would be glad to talk with you about them.

FOWLER'S CURRENCY COMMITTEE IS NAMED.

Chairman Fowler of the House committee on banking and currency Thursday announced the sub-committee that will have the work of framing the new currency bill to be reported by that committee to the House after the holidays.

The sub-committee is composed of three Republicans and two Democrats. The Republicans, who were taken in the order of their seniority for service on the committee, are; Messrs. Fowler, New Jersey; Prince, Illinois, and Calderhead, Kansas.

The Democrats were not chosen for seniority of service. They are Messrs. Lewis, Georgia, and Gillespie, Texas.

This sub-committee will enter upon its labors at once.

Mrs. J. Erwin Waters, of East Third street, is quite ill at her home.

CHAPTER XIV.

The King's Messenger.

A minute passed and the bedroom door was again opened. Madame de Varnier and Dr. Starva conversed in hurried whispers, the electric light shining full on my face. I moved about restlessly, but did not open my eyes. Presently the woman seated herself at my bedside. Dr. Starva left the room, the door being slightly ajar.

I could not resist the temptation to half open my eyes. Madame de Varnier was praying fervently, regarding with passionate adoration a jeweled cross held before her eyes. A peremptory knock at the door of the drawing-room opening on the corridor put an abrupt end to these devotions, which seemed to me so incongruous. She clasped her hands; she listened, rigid with anxiety. It may be imagined that I myself listened, scarcely less anxious. It was the concierge again.

"Here is the Englishman's card. He says he is a king's messenger. He brings important dispatches. He insists that were his Excellency at the point of death he must none the less place these dispatches in his hands to-night."

"But as his Excellency's physician I forbid it," replied Dr. Starva, with determination.

"And," entreated the woman gliding to the door, "can you not make him understand how disagreeable it would be for me to be surprised in these rooms, and that it would annoy Sir Mortimer beyond measure?"

"It is useless, madam. Have I not told him that embarrassing circumstances make it impossible that his Excellency be officially recognized to-night?"

"And still he insists?" inquired Starva angrily.

"As only the stubborn English can insist. He is outside the door at this moment. He has sent me to you, not to ask permission, but to announce his coming. He refuses to go away until he has seen his Excellency. If the door is not opened in five minutes he will call the manager of the hotel."

"His name?"

"I am giving you his card."

"Captain Reginald Forbes," read Madame de Varnier. "Well, we will admit this Captain Forbes."

I listened to this dialogue with a trepidation that deprived me of power to think or act. That fatal indecision which, on certainly one occasion, had already brought its tragic penalty again seized me. The crisis impending might leave in its wake consequences too grave to be thought of—might leave me a man disgraced and liable to the extreme penalty of the law. And yet I lay still, in a nightmare of indecision and inaction. It was the same numbness of will that had paralyzed me on the Stralegg Pass. Heaven grant that the consequences now be not as disastrous!

I heard the click of a revolver. Then Captain Forbes was admitted to the salon.

"Where is Sir Mortimer Brett?" he demanded harshly. "I must see him without further delay. May I ask who you are, sir?"

"The physician of his Excellency," replied Starva, bowing. He was no longer attempting to deny that I was Sir Mortimer Brett. "Sir Mortimer is seriously ill. I refuse to permit him to be disturbed. I have brought him here to Vitznau, hoping that the old surroundings may induce him to sleep. It is a nervous disorder that has prostrated Sir Mortimer. He has suffered terribly from insomnia. There are moments when he is delirious. To bring him sleep it was necessary to give him an opiate, you understand. If he is awakened he may be sane or he may deny his very identity."

"Which is his room?"

"Captain Forbes, I forbid it. It is impossible. I warn you—"

Madame de Varnier opened the door of the bedroom quietly.

"If the gentleman insists on awaking Sir Mortimer we are powerless," she said gently. "But at least let him not be excited more than necessary, sir."

"I shall endeavor to follow your instructions, madam," said Forbes stiffly.

He strode to my bedside. I could imagine with what breathless anxiety the adventurers watched him. Was he sufficiently intimate with Sir Mortimer Brett to denounce me instantly as an impostor?

"Your Excellency!" he said gently. "Your Excellency!"

The immediate danger of discovery was past. At least he had not detected the deception so far. He called me again; he shook my shoulder respectfully. I opened my eyes.

"What is it?" I demanded, bewildered. I am horrified to-day when I think of the facility that was mine in playing this game of intrigue. I looked languidly from Captain Forbes to Madame de Varnier, who had resumed her seat at the bedside. The question was addressed to her.

She took my hand. "This is Captain Forbes, a king's messenger. He has brought you dispatches of importance."

"Ah, yes," I said wearily, and looked at him with dull eyes.

"I am sorry to arouse you, sir." Contempt for the man struggled with respect for his office. "But my orders at the Foreign Office were to give you these papers at the earliest possible moment. The business is urgent. May I suggest that you read them at once?"

My eyes unconsciously turned to Madame de Varnier for guidance. She stroked my hand gently.

"Do you not see that he is in no condition to be disturbed to-night?" she asked indignantly.

For the first time Captain Forbes hesitated. He placed one sunburned hand on his breast as if to guard jealously the dispatches he bore. That he should hesitate at all seemed to me incredible. But Captain Forbes seemed a fair example of that type of Englishman who performs his duty with the stubbornness and obstinacy of a fool as well as a hero. Chance often determines which of the two characters he shall assume. It is true he had not the remotest suspicion that I was not Sir Mortimer. But surely he must see that I was in the power of these adventurers.

All my fears reached a climax, when, looking steadily at me a moment, he turned to the others:

"Your Excellency!" He Said Gently. "Your Excellency!"

"I must speak to Sir Mortimer alone."

I saw Starva grasp the revolver concealed beneath his coat. Madame de Varnier silenced the protests on his lips with a meaning glance. She realized the uselessness of further resistance.

"You will not excite him more than necessary," she entreated anxiously. "And you must not be surprised to find his mind still confused as a result of the opiate given him."

"I shall spare him as far as possible," Forbes replied with some sternness. Drawing himself erect, his arms folded, he waited until the door had closed behind them.

My first impulse was to put an end to this farce. But again I hesitated. They were listening outside that door; every suspicion was alert; the slightest cause would fan the suspicion to a flame.

And then, what? I should have made myself ridiculous to no purpose. I had gone far in my reckless venture—too far to risk all by attempting to warn Captain Forbes at this crucial moment. His brain worked too slowly—he was too deficient in imagination—too much lacking in subtlety and finesse. I refused—recklessly, if you will, but deliberately—to risk the success of my scheme by drumming into the dull brain of Captain Forbes the true state of affairs. It would have taken him a good quarter of an hour to grasp merely the facts. At that time he would understand just enough of them to be stubbornly convinced that I was equally involved with the other two, but he would think my nerve had failed me and that I was attempting to purchase my own freedom from punishment at the expense of the others. And certainly they would drag me down with them, if for no other purpose than revenge. No; this was not the hour for confidences; Captain Forbes was not the man to be made a confidant at such an hour.

He looked down at me with cold respect. Outwardly I met his steady look with something of fortitude and composure, but beneath the clothes my two hands were clenched rigid.

From a silk bag suspended about his neck he produced two envelopes. He weighed them in his hand a moment; then he placed the bulkier of the two in its silk case. The other he held toward me.

"The Foreign Office, sir, has intrusted to me two dispatches. My orders are to place them in your hands at the earliest opportunity. But one of these dispatches I know to be of great importance. I shall therefore keep it for the present, unless you demand it."

"No, no," I muttered hoarsely, "I cannot receive it now."

"Then to-morrow, sir, I shall hope to find you in better health. Then I shall give you the second dispatch. This one I leave with you now, and may I suggest that you read it at your earliest convenience?"

I took refuge in silence. I closed my eyes wearily.

"Before I bid you good night, sir, I think it right that you should know that your mother and sister are in this hotel. At the risk that you think me impertinent I dare to hope that your meeting with them to-morrow may be free from any embarrassment or unhappiness."

The dispatch he had left, gorgeous and brave with its royal crest and embossing, lay passively in my hand.

And now a new dilemma confronted me. I was supposed to be under the influence of an opiate; they would not scruple to take from me the dispatch. To allow that might give them such information as would make their conspiracy, whatever its nature, the more effective. To resist would tell them that I had been feigning

I must hide the papers. But where?

It was a bare little chamber; my heart sank as I noted how bare.

I leaped out of bed. Again I threw open the shutters. I could hear Capt. Forbes speaking sternly; if he could but hold them half a minute!

In the garden below the marble basin of a disused fountain at once caught my eyes.

I tore the corner of the envelope, inserted my penknife to weight the packet, leaned over the balcony and dropped it.

It fell squarely into the basin among the leaves and moss

To regain the room was the work of an instant.

I heard Captain Forbes wish them a cold good night, and Madame de Varnier answer him mockingly. Then the bedroom door was opened and Starva shuffled into the room.

"Who was that man?" I demanded languidly, and regarded him with listless eyes, my hand to my forehead.

He shrugged his shoulders, disdaining to answer.

"He has left some papers here by mistake."

"Perhaps," I muttered indifferently, and pretended to sleep.

I heard him moving about the room for some time. Madame de Varnier and he whispered together. I felt so little concerned as to the result of this search that I actually fell asleep. The strain of the evening had exhausted me. No doubt the search was extended to me personally; I believe I was vaguely conscious of it.

CHAPTER XV.

The Castle of Happiness.

"You sleep soundly, my friend."

Dr. Starva was looking down at me with grim intentness.

It was not yet dawn. His immense figure seemed even more huge than it was in this uncertain light. It appeared to threaten, to menace me. And yet I welcomed his presence; at least they had not made their escape.

I looked up at him with cool assurance.

"A light conscience gives deep slumber. Do we start so early?"

"Yes. Your coffee is waiting for you in the salon."

I dressed rapidly. A certain depression would have been natural. The night is the time of follies; with the morning come clear thought and prudence. But not so with me. It is true that I detested Dr. Starva. His methods were too gross; his eyes were too closely set together; his mouth too cruel and sensual. I could have wished him out of the game. And yet I believed that I was a match for him.

But this woman who tempted and pitied! This woman whose beauty fascinated and whose treachery repelled! This woman who lied and prayed in the same breath!

As I thought of her I was at once furious and eager. I was ashamed to think how eager. I had pledged myself to the cold Diana of my dreams. For her I ran these risks; for her I might be disgraced and a felon. It was her gratitude I coveted; her forgiveness I craved.

And yet for the moment I was seeking the flame and the glamour of the other woman—this warm, mysterious creature of diverse moods.

Her fantastic chateau held out a promise, not of happiness, indeed, but of the joy of doing, of daring.

So as I dressed my spirits were buoyant. The little garden below, half hidden in the mist that came from the lake, was fresh and charming in the morning dew. Patches of flowers, brave in scarlet and purple and blue, opened their eyes to the dawn. I followed mechanically the graveled paths, geometric and straight, threading the sparkling lawns.

I looked eagerly down at the battered fountain choked with refuse. I could see no trace of the long, white envelope. It was completely concealed by the leaves.

I found it impossible to rescue the little packet from its hiding place. My hostess and her cousin kept too careful an eye on me for that. But it was a tolerably secure hiding place; and frankly I was not sorry to leave the proof of my complicity behind me.

A faint breeze, cold with the snow of the mountains, fanned my cheek. The poetry of the dawn thrilled me. Before the evening came the placid lake might be lashed into fury. The trees, now gently swaying, might be bent and broken by the violence of the storm. But now the sky was clear. When the storms came I would try to meet them. But before they did come why should I not enjoy the present? I threw open the door and stepped into the salon where coffee and Madame de Varnier awaited me.

She greeted me with vivacity. But I was not blind to the cool glance that measured. "The fool has no suspicions," the eyes said, while the lips asked how I had slept.

"Admirably," I answered gayly. "And we are to start at once for your Castle of Happiness?"

"You have a sublime faith to still believe it that?" she questioned mockingly as she poured my coffee.

"Why not?" I cried mockingly, in my turn. "Is it not happiness to be with you, madam?"

"Pas des banalites, monsieur," she replied with an impatient gesture. "But you really believe that the tiresome journey will repay you?"

"Since I am resolved to hear your secret, yes."

"Oh, ungracious!" She smiled at me ruefully. "I think I prefer an insincere compliment to an awkward truth."

"Madam, it is not I who made the condition."

"Ah, you are a very cautious friend, monsieur."

"I generally try to look before I leap," I returned with composture.

I was not unwilling that she think it curiosity that prompted me to accept the extraordinary invitation given with so little heed to convention. She had hinted that we were to be of mutual use to each other; but of this I was skeptical. I accepted the invitation precisely in the spirit in which it was given. It would be shocking form, to say the least, to be a guest that one might have the opportunity to play the detective. But she and I had placed ourselves beyond the pale of conventionality. Either distrusted the other. An armed truce—that was the word that described our relations, and she had suggested that word.

Dr. Starva entered.

"En route," he said gruffly. "The carriage is waiting."

It was very early, scarcely past five. The night porter, drowsy-eyed and sullen, took us down on the elevator and put our luggage in the carriage. I confess I breathed more freely when the hotel was some miles behind us and we had seen neither Helena Brett nor Captain Forbes.

As Madame de Varnier had warned me, the journey itself was long and tiresome; nor did Madame de Vernier and her companion exert themselves much to relieve its monotony.

It was almost dusk when she pointed out to me the pinnacles of her chateau.

For the last hour the horses had been struggling up a dusty road winding about the mountainside. Forests of fir were on either side. From far below came the impetuous murmur of a stream. High above the forests of fir trees there were herds of cattle. We could hear the faint jingle of the cow-bells. Only rarely had there been any view, but the clear and pure atmosphere told me that the altitude must be considerable. But this sylvan scene suggested nothing of the horrors of a few days ago. The mountains, purple and pink in the dusk, were too far away.

Suddenly there was a turn in the road. Now we had an uninterrupted view of the chateau across a green valley. In this vague light its towers and turrets seemed as unreal and ghostly as a fairy fabric.

At the base of its white walls a tiny village, crouching close to the chateau for protection, found a precarious foothold on the steep hillside. There was a maze of red-tiled roofs, high-gabled and sloping, tier upon tier of them, each pierced by numbers of quaint dormer windows.

A wild river, fed by the turbulent streams of the mountain snows, flung itself in headlong rage down the sloping valley, straight for the chateau, as if to sweep it from its base. Reaching the castle, it spent its fury on the rocks, then, as if baffled of its prey, made an abrupt half circle about the base and continued its stormy career, seeking a less powerful foe.

"At last," breathed Madame de Varnier. "Well, my friend, does it promise diversion for you?"

"The village and the castle breathe the spirit of romance," I cried with animation.

"Ah, romance! What if I say to you," she whispered, "that your day of romance has come?"

I glanced toward Dr. Starva whose shaggy head was nodding. "Even we Americans, madam, are not indifferent to its glamour. But too often the romance of medievalism suggests dishonor."

She looked at me startled, then shrugged her shoulders. "One must take the world as one finds it," she said indifferently.

MISS BARBARA FLEMING'S SCORING WON THE GAME

Miss Barbara Fleming, of the girls' basketball team, of the city high school, scored all the points for her team in a game with the girls of the Bayonne High School at the local school gymnasium yesterday afternoon. The score was 18 to 2, the visitors making their only points on fouls. Miss Fleming has scored all the points made by the city high school girls' team this season, making fifteen points for her team in a recent game with the Westfield High School when this season opened.

The visiting five was outclassed by the Plainfielders, who did some good passing and excelled in team work. Miss Fleming caged the ball eight times from the floor, on several occasions on long shots, and scored the other two points for her team on fouls.

The local team lined up as follows: Miss Bessie Aipaugh and Miss Esther Crampton, forwards; Miss Dorothy Merrill, centre; Miss Barbara Fleming, Miss Madeline Durar and Miss Catherine Sminck, forwards. Miss Harris, of Bayonne, acted as referee, and Miss Mary Ferry, of the local school faculty, was umpire. The linesmen were James Fleming and James Mauger, and Miss Margaret Leggett was time keeper. Fifteen and twenty minutes halves were played.

The next game for the local five will be played January 10, when the girls' team from the Newark High School will meet the Plainfield five in the local school gymnasium for the State championship among the girls. The Plainfield High School girls won this championship last year.

STATE TREASURER'S BOOKS FOUND CORRECT.

Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen and Senators Bradley and Gebhardt and Assemblymen Hendrickson, Auf der Heide, Olwell, Hahn and Drake, the joint committee of the Legislature to audit the accounts of the State Treasurer, have gone over the books and securities in the strong box of the commonwealth. Everything was found in good condition. At the conclusion of the committee's work the auditors and a number of other guests were entertained at luncheon by the State Treasurer, Daniel S. Voorhees, of Morris county.

The examination showed securities in the school fund aggregating $4,597,235.05, composed as follows: Stocks and bonds, $2,524,460; riparian leases, $528,654.24; school district bonds, $1,169,645; bonds and mortgages, $323,325.50; real estate held by the fund, 51,231.31. The amount in the State fund is $188,700.

VANQUISHED LEAL'S FIVE

Preparatory School Boys are Defeated by New York Collegiate School Team.

BY A SCORE OF 47 TO 9.

One-sided Game on the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium Floor—Lawrence Caged Ball Twice.

In the opening game of the winter's basketball schedule, the Leal's school five was defeated by the New York Collegiate school team at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium yesterday afternoon by a score of 47 to 9. The local team was outplayed from the start and the visitors, who had the advantage in height and weight, had everything their own way. The score at the end of the first half was 28 to 1 in favor of the visitors, and to within a few minutes of the end of the game Brown was the only man of the local five to score a basket. Just before time was called, R. Lawrance caged the ball twice in succession on long shots and Duke got away from his man long enough to make a basket. The summary:

Baskets from the floor, Blumenthal, 9; Murray, 6; Devereaux, 4; Rich, 2; R. Lawrence, 2; Victor, Duke, Brown. Baskets from fouls, Duke, 2. Referee, G. L. Listman. Umpire, Mr. Herckel, of the Collegiates. Scorer, H. M. Ladd. Timer, Driscoll. Twenty minute halves.

Leal's 2nd, 21; Collegiate 2nd, 18.

The game between the second teams of the two schools was more closely contested, but the local team kept the lead through both halves and finally won out by a score of 21 to 18. The teams were more evenly matched and the play was fast throughout. The summaries:

Leals 2nd—Day, lf; Randolph, rf; Rushmore, c; Campbell(capt.), lg; Dallas, rg.

Collegiate 2nd—Horton, lf; Lefferts, rf; Mygatt (capt.), c; White, Merrifield, lg; Dunlap, rg.

Baskets from the floor, Horton, 5; Dallas, 5; Day, 2; Rushmore, 2; Lefferts, 2; White, Randolph. Baskets from fouls, Horton, 2; Campbell. Twenty minute halves. The same officials acted for both games.

PARK CLUB FIVE TAKE THREE GAMES FROM JERSEYS

The Park Club five rolled a series of three games on the local alleys last night against the Jersey City Club, it being the first match this season between these clubs in the Central Journal Bowling League tournament, and the home team distinguished itself by winning all three by safe margins. The Parks started off in whirlwind fashion in the first game, winning by a score of 959 to 721. Every one of the five men rolled over 200 but Monroe Long and F. O. Ball, but the latter came within three of reaching the 200 mark.

The Parks took the second game by a score of 862 to 756 and the third by a score of 877 to 750. While they did their best work in the first game, their scores in the other two games was good enough to distance their opponents. Daniel not only rolled 202 in the first game, but in the third game he put up a score of 211.

Barlow's three scores were excellent, 210, 194 and 167, in fact the whole team rolled a steady game throughout and nothing seemed to rattle the members. As for the visiting team its scores were below the average. The highest score was rolled by Obergfell, who in the third game rolled 190. This is probably due to the fact that the members were not well acquainted with the alleys and they may be expected to do better later on. The work of the Parks thus far has put them in the championship class and if they keep it up there is no doubt but that they will land in first place. The scores:

PARK CLUB.

BOROUGH BASKETBALL TEAM TO BEGIN WORK NEXT WEEK

Now that the North Plainfield High School basketball team has a place to practise in the old Warren chapel, the work of organizing the team which is to represent the school in the interscholastic basketball league this winter will be begun at once and regular practises will be held in the new gymnasium next week. Acting for the association, Harry Smith was in New York Thursday to secure baskets and a ball and by the first of the week the new hall will be ready for the players. Russel Conroy has been elected captain and manager of the team.

The borough five this year will be the same bunch that represented the school in the league last year. These players are Russel Conroy and "Tone" Overton, forwards; Clarence Steiner and Leslie Powlison, guards, and Byron McClintock, centre. There is a big list of candidates for positions on the five, including William Herrman, Frank McClintock, Charles Lee, Fred Becker, George Parsons and William Day. These will all be retained on the squad by Captain Conroy and the positions on the team will be competed for again this season. Aside from these candidates, the majority of the pupils of the high school are taking an active interest in basketball and it is probable that four class teams will be formed to compete for the school championship.

As yet no arrangements have been completed for securing a coach for the season, but it is probable that Principal Benjamin Phelps, who acted as coach for the football team, will be the athletic coach of the school and take charge of the basketball. The borough boys have several games arranged with other schools and are planning to work hard to get the five in shape for the first game of the interscholastic league, which comes next week.

GRANT BOWLERS NOW AMONG THE LEADERS

Another clean sweep went on record in the bowling tourney at Campbell's alleys, last night, when Chief Kiely's Grants took three games from John Campbell's Garibaldis. The losing team never got any nearer to a tally than eighteen pins and the others were dropped by margins of 44 and 84. The Grants' clean-up now puts them alongside of the Bismarcks and Brian Borus in leading the contestants, all three teams having won five games and lost one.

Ed. Laing was the "star" bowler of the night, hitting the pins for 225, 176 and 208, an average of 203. His shooting was something like that of Chauncey Stout's last week and evoked enthusiastic applause from the gallery. Chief Kiely was somewhat off his game at the start but managed to land a 200 mark in the last try. His average was 168.1. The Grants rolled with one many shy, "Bil" Kiely failing to show up, and his average of 147 in his previous games, was filled in.

Orren Dodge was high man on the Garibaldis, showing up with an average of 180. Campbell was second best and McLaughlin, Cutting and Crowley either rolled indifferently or bad.

The scores:

GRANT.
Kiely	145	160	209

Famous Linguist to Lecture Here.

Dr. Wad-el Ward, famous as a linguist and lecturer, will speak before the Men's Club of the First Baptist church Monday night. Although he was born on Mt. Zion, Jerusalem, he is not a Jew. He has lectured in the great cities of Continental Europe as well as in Great Britain and was formerly the manager of the United States Exposition on the east of the Jordan. Dr. Ward will be accompanied by his daughter, whose singing in native costume adds much to the interest of his lectures. Dr. Ward will tell in an interesting manner of his travels in Jerusalem.

Get Good Positions.

The money panic it seems has not affected the opportunities for well trained workers. The following is a list of Plainfield Business College students who procured good positions this week: Miss Florence Conroy, of North Plainfield, with a firm in New York city; Miss Jennie DeMott, with firm in Bayonne; Miss Jessie D. Streng with a lawyer in Somerville; Miss Delia Dufford with firm in New York city.

Reed's Case Again Laid Over.

The case of Patrick Reed, colored, who was charged by Truant Officer Miss Adelaide Ball with keeping his daughter out of school, was called in the city court this morning, but was laid over because of the non-appearance of the complainant during the trials. Miss Ball appeared before court convened and again after Judge Runyon had disposed of the cases for the day. Reed registered a large-sized "kick" with Chief Kiely at being compelled to leave his work.

Banquet For College Men.

Kenneth Robbie, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., is planning a dinner and reception to be given to college men who were once members of the boys' department of the association during the Christmas vacation. There will be about fifty association men and boys present at the affair and speeches of college experience will be given by undergraduates at the various colleges who live in this city.

Christmas Services at Y. W. C. A.

In the "spirit of Christmas" an informal gathering of women will be held at the Y. W. C. A. tomorrow afternoon. Miss Elizabeth Chadbourne will tell the story of Christmas and other stories that cluster around that day. Sunday afternoon, December 15, at 4 o'clock, there will be another "drop in" hour. The glee club will lead in the singing of Christmas carols. All the girls in the city who would enjoy a pleasant home hour are invited.

Will Present Farce Comedy.

A farce comedy in two acts, entitled "A Suit of Livery," will be given by local talent in the Willow Grove chapel, Thursday night, December 12, at 8:15 o'clock. Stages will be at the southside of the Westfield station of the New Jersey Central and at the Scotch Plains trolley to convey people to the chapel. There will be music, vocal and instrumental, between the acts. The proceeds will be for the benefit of the Sunday-school Christmas fund.

HITS SHAW PHILOSOPHY

Dr. Herring Shows the Fallacy of Reasoning in "Man and Superman."

IS NOT EVOLUTION'S PRODUCT.

Minister Quotes Scripture to Support His Defense of the Divine Creation of Man—Some Sound Logic.

"Man and Superman," was the subject of an exceedingly interesting discourse delivered by Rev. Dr. C. E. Herring at the First Presbyterian church last night. The sermon was in the nature of an anyisis of G. Bernard Shaw philosophy as found in his story of "Man and Superman," and other writings. Dr. Herring spoke as follows:

"My theme tonight is 'Man and Superman.' You recognize that it is not original but borrowed and for that very reason I have chosen it. Bernard Shaw in a book of that title answers in his own way the problem —'What is man?' It is the kind of answer a man gives when he abandons God's revelation of what man is.

"Let us see what man is according to a man's interpretation and then note what he is according to the Divine estimate.

"Man according to Shaw, is a product of evolution, but not the final result of that evolution. He is no more final than the starfish or the ape is final. Surely man or the type of man we see is not worth while—for the difference between man and what man is pleased to call the lower animals is not very great.

"Man is only a stage in the evolution. We shall eventually have something greater than man, and something which will surpass man more than man surpasses the ape. This is certainly not very complimentary to man, for he must be followed by superman.

"Back of this evolution is what Shaw is pleased to call a Life Force —no personal God, but a life force that has been making experiments until, by chance, man was formed.

"Think of it! Instead of a God, wise, loving, powerful, upon whom we can depend, we have a blind thing back of man which man helps in its upward struggle. Behind life is the Life-Force which moulds the stuff of life into working shape with no definite idea as to the results. Then again we have this teaching: How has the ape and the star fish developed into man? by following instinct. How shall man evolute into the superman? by the same method.

"If lower forms of creation have developed into higher forms by following instinct rather than duty, man shall so develop, and finally we shall have a world of Shakespeares, Caesars, etc.

"Right action in life does not result from following any precepts of duty. It is not what he should do, or ought to do, but what instinct tells him to do.

"The golden rule is that there are no golden rules. What do you think about it? You have probably read this philosophy or perhaps seen it portrayed on the stage.

"This is man's answer to the problem: 'What is Life?' Your life is simply a stage in the evolution of life as the ape and star fish are stages in the evolution of life. You are working to something far better than man; that something better is the superman. Then your individual value is nil. There is no heaven for anyone of you any more than there is a heaven for the ape or the star fish.

"There is no God to think about you, to care about the perplexities and sorrows of your life. Truly this is a stone instead of bread, and yet there are some that will abandon the truths of Jesus Christ that emphasize the value of the human soul in the sight of God for the ravings of a Bernard Shaw or an Elbert Hubbard.

"Let me give you another answer to the problem. The Bible tells me of these two great facts with regard to man. He is made of the dust of the earth. He is made in the image of God. The first speaks of his temporal condition. The second of his eternal character.

"Man is an animal like other animals in his bodily nature and functions, but man is like God in his spiritual nature. Man is like God in that he has reasoning power. Man can understand the world that God has made. Science is possible because the thought in the universe is similar to thought in us.

"Someone has said that 'man is like God in the potential infinitude of his nature. He would not know he was finite unless he had been able to transcend the finite and frame an idea of the infinite.'

"The animal is satisfied with the finite in which he lives; but man is forever reaching out to something grander than he has yet experienced.

"There is, of course, something

BERCKMAN STREET AGOG

Wronged Husband Seeks Police Aid to Find Happiness-destroyer.

IT WAS A MIDNIGHT CHASE.

Tells Chief He Wants To Get at Man But "My Wife Won't Let Me."

One of those domestic disturbances that upsets a neighborhood and furnishes a choice morsel of gossip for all the Mother Goosenecks and Polly Prys for blocks around, is at present agitating the upper end of Berckman street and has gone so far as to get downtown. The injured husband—there's always an injured husband in cases of this kind—has made an appeal to the police to help him locate a man who he claims is responsible for the trouble and who he declares will be annihilated if they happen to meet.

The affair in question took place one night—or rather one early morning—last week. The complaining husband was called away in the evening, and it happened to be one on which his wife had invited a number of friends around for a little sociability. When the head of the house returned, without any announcement, he walked into the parlor. He was sorry afterward that he did, as the merrymakers were laboring under the impression that "life is what you make it" and had thrown dull care down the well.

It was plainly evident that she didn't care to have her husband see her. When he appeared a friend of her's, without stopping to get his hat, made a leap for the back door and hurled himself out into the night. Hubby was close at his heels and then and there ensued a foot race such as Berckman street never saw before and which has been the subject under discussion at all East End family gatherings since.

Both pursuer and pursued only hit the high spots in their frantic dash over the landscape and Union county might have had a homicide case on its hands if the two had clashed. Luck was with the man in front, however, and the last seen of him he was taking seven-league-boot strides up North avenue toward Netherwood.

The husband went back home for chapter two of the occurrence, but when he arrived there all the guests had recalled engagements elsewhere and the only ones left were the wife and a young woman friend who lives on West Second street. Both tried to tell him that he had gotten unduly excited and that he ought to see things in a different light. They might as well have talked to a roaring lion and the woman friend finally decided she had better "beat it" too. She left the pair to themselves and just how they patched up the trouble no one knows.

But just the same, the husband is determined to get hold of the man and that's why he dropped into police headquarters with a tale of woe. He says he doesn't know his name and his wife won't tell him, consequently he wants the sleuths to get it. Chief Kiely has his description and will furnish it to anyone interested.

Principal Travell Reports.

At the semi-annual convention of the State High School Teachers' Association held in Newark Saturday, Principal Ira W. Travell, of the City High School, read his report as chairman of the welfare committee of the association. He suggested having but one convention a year, and recommended that it be held at Atlantic City during the Christmas holidays so that those who attended could more easily be present at the State teachers' association meeting held there annually at that time. He recommended that the convention last for two days. The suggestions about the convention were endorsed by the association and referred to the executive committee. Others who attended from Plainfield were District Supervisor Henry C. Krebs, of the Somerset street school, and Lindsey Best of the city high school faculty.

Freeholders to Approve Plans.

The bridge committee from the Union County Board of Freeholders will meet tomorrow at the lower end of Westfield township, where the Acqueduct Water Company proposes to erect a new bridge, for the purpose of approving plans for the same. The company recently erected an $8,000 bridge in the same township near the Lehigh Valley Railroad. The new bridge is to be erected under the supervision of the bridge committee and County Engineer F. J. Hubbard.

JUDGE DILL AS SPEAKER

Corporation Law Authority May Give a Talk at Board of Trade Dinner.

A GALAXY OF CELEBRITIES.

Governor-elect Fort and Senator Frelinghuysen Also to Be on Hand on January 28.

In addition to Governor-elect J. Franklin Fort and State Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen the speakers at the Board of Trade banquet on January 28, as told exclusively in The Daily Press on Saturday it is quite probable that Judge J. B. Dill, of Orange, will respond to a toast.

Mr. Dill is the foremost authority on corporation law in New Jersey and was appointed to the bench some time ago by Governor Stokes. The topics for the speakers have not been assigned as yet but it is known that the subjects will be confined to matters of current State interest.

The place for holding the banquet has not been decided upon as yet by the committee of which former Mayor Alexander Gilbert is chairman. The choice is said to lay between Truell Hall and the Casino. The price per plate, it is expected, will be two dollars.

Every effort is being made to make the gathering a notable one in the history of Plainfield and among the guests will be many State celebrites in addition to the speakers.

The committee consists of Mr. Gilbert, chairman; Eugene M. Laing, Samuel W. Townsend, A. E. Force and William L. Saunders. President H. W. Marshall is giving the committee his hearty co-operation in planning the event.

RENDERED SELECTIONS OF DYING COMPOSER

Miss Frances Rittenhouse and Miss Muriel Collins, pupils of Miss May Vincent Whitney, assisted by Miss Vara Merriam, soprano, pupil of Mrs. Enid La Mont, of Cranford, and Mrs. La Mont, gave a delightful MacDowell recital Saturday afternoon at the home of Miss Rittenhouse on Sandford avenue. The recital was one of many being given throughout the country at this time owing to the fact that the great composer is dying and a peculiar interest has been aroused in consequence.

Mrs. La Mont gave a concise and attractive sketch of the life of MacDowell in opening the program, which was as follows:

"Forest Spirts," the Misses Rittenhouse and Collins; "To the Sea," "Song," and "A. D. 1620," sea pieces, Miss Collins; "A Scottish Tone Picture," Miss Rittenhouse; "A Lovely Rose," "A Winter Lullaby," "The Robin Sings," Miss Merriam; "Witches' Dance," Miss Collins; "To a Wild Rose," "Shadow Dance," "To a Water Lilly," "The Eagle," Miss Rittenhouse; "The Shepherdess' Song," "Summer Idyll," the Misses Rittenhouse and Collins; "From a Wandering Iceberg," "March Wind," Miss Collins; songs, Miss Merriam; "Polonaise," Miss Rittenhouse.

The work of Miss Rittenhouse and Miss Collins as well as that of the assisting artists aroused much enthusiasm on the part of the large audience.

INTERESTING TIME HAD AT Y. W. C. A. YESTERDAY.

Miss Elizabeth Chadbourne, who was to have told the Christmas story at the Young Women's Christian Association yesterday afternoon was unable to be present, but the girls who gathered there enjoyed the informal hour notwithstanding. Miss Tapping read the story of the visit of the wise men and the Christ and told how the men of the east predicted events from studying the stars. Miss Mosher, the physical director of the association, read Van Dyke's story of the "Other Wise Man," who sought the Christ and found him only after years of wandering.

The hour next Sunday will be in charge of the glee club. They will lead in singing Christmas carols and Christmas songs. The glee club has been practicing for several weeks on the Christmas music and are most enthusiastic over it.

Adjourned Meeting of Council.

The Common Council will meet tonight in adjourned session. The business will be chiefly of a routine nature. Probably another adjourned meeting or two will be held before January 1, the time when the 1908 body goes into office.

MR. ROBBIE RESIGNS AS Y.M.C.A. SECRETARY

Kenneth Robbie, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A., has tendered his resignation to the association board and will leave Plainfield in the spring to become financial secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Springfield, Mass. Mr. Robbie's resignation, presented at the regular meeting of the board of directors held at the association, Thursday, was formally accepted at a special meeting of the board held yesterday, though an effort will be made to have him reconsider his action and remain in Plainfield. Mr. Robbie said today that he would undoubtedly accept the position offered by the Massachusetts association, for it will afford him a broader opportunity for work than his present position.

Mr. Robbie is held by the local association until September 1, 1908, by contract, but President J. W. Gavett, of the Y. M. C. A., said this morning that he will be released before that time, and he will probably go to Springfield early in the spring. As yet the board has no successor to name for the office held by Mr. Robbie.

SALVATION ARMY ASKS BENEVOLENT FOLKS HELP

Captain and Mrs. A. Hopkins and their devoted band of Salvation Army workers are busily engaged making preparations to provide Christmas dinners to the deserving poor families in Plainfield. Last year many families were thus provided for, and they confidently expect that sufficient funds will be forthcoming to enable them to do all they are planning to do this year.

They are working in co-operation with Miss M. Holly, of the Charity Organization Society, which will enable them to reach the most needy and deserving. Every family receiving a basket will be known personally either by Miss M. Holly or the Army workers. Each basket will contain meat or poultry, vegetables, etc., amply sufficient to provide a good family dinner. It is desired to supply 160 families.

Capt. Hopkins is replying upon the customary generosity of their friends to rally to their assistance as in former years.

Any contribution, large or small, of vegetables, groceries, poultry or cash will be gratefully received at the Salvation Army Headquarters, 157 East Second street, next door to fire headquarters.

FIRST ELECTROCUTION TO OCCUR THIS WEEK

The law substituting death by electricity for hanging in capital cases in New Jersey is to go into operation this week unless Governor Stokes should interfere in behalf of Saverio di Giovanni, an Italian, under death sentence for the murder of Joseph Sansone at Raritan, Somerset county, on Sept. 22 last.

In accordance with the provisions of the law, no public notice will be given of the day and time of the execution, and only those whose presence is desired at the carrying out of the sentence will be informed when it is to take place. Besides di Giovanni, three other murderers are doomed to die in the electric chair during the week beginning Dec. 15.

The executions will be conducted by E. F. Davis, State electrician of New York, who for many years has had charge of the execution of capital offenders in that State.

The death chair is in the death house just outside the State prison at Trenton. It was made in Sing Sing prison, and was only recently brought to Trenton. The current required for the executions will be provided by the Public Service Corporation.

Another "Flatiron."

The German-American Insurance Company, which was organized by John W. Murray, Sr., of this city, has undertaken the erection of the third "flatiron" building in New York. The structure is now well underway at the triangular junction of Maiden lane, Liberty and William streets and will be sent up to a height of twenty stories. The site is in the heart of the downtown insurance district and one of the most valuable in the city.

FAVOR NEW COUNTY IDEA

RESOLUTIONS ARE ADOPTED.

Its Civic Association Wants That Village to Have a Closer Union With Plainfield and Latter's Suburbs.

South Plainfield's Good Government Club has endorsed Mayor N. B. Smalley's idea for a new county to be formed of Plainfield and its suburbs. That village's civic association lost no time after some of its members heard the speech of the fighting mayor of North Plainfield at the Board of Trade meeting on Thursday night to approve the scheme.

After several members had spoken favorably of the idea, the following resolution was adopted by an unanimous vote:

"Resolved, That the Good Government Club of South Plainfield heartily and unanimously endorses Mayor Smalley's suggestion for the formation of a new county consisting of New Market, Fanwood, Dunellen, Scotch Plains, Watchung, North Plainfield, Plainfield and South Plainfield.

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Mayor Smalley and the Plainfield Board of Trade."

Matters connected with the South Plainfield public school were discussed. A committee was named to consult with the members of the Board of Education regarding sanitation of the school building and attendance of pupils.

The report of the good roads committee showed that satisfactory promise is being made.

ALL ALTON BEFORE THE VICE CHANCELLOR

The case of Miles Reusch and other residents of Alton against Theodore Glazier, seeking to make permanent a temporary injunction restraining the defendant from continuing to operate his fat factory at that place, is being heard before Vice Chancellor Walker today in the Common Council rooms. Codington & Swackhamer represent the complainants and Judge William Newcorn, the defendant. Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., is assistant counsel for Mr. Glazier.

Practically the whole population of Alton residing in the vicinity of Mr. Glazier's plant is present. Mr. and Mrs. Miles Reusch, their daughter, Miss Edith Reusch and Miss LaForge all testified to the alleged nuisance. At times they said they were compelled to close the windows at their home; that they were driven from the fields where they were at work and that the stench from the plant was unbearable.

Rrs. Reusch testified that she had been made ill by the stench and that Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan had been treating her. Mr. Reusch corroborated his wife's testimony as did also the daughter and Miss LaForge.

It is expected that the hearing will occupy the whole day. Sometime ago a temporary injunction was obtained from the court restraining Mr. Glazier, but this was afterward modified to such an extent that he was permitted to continue his business under certain restrictions provided the nuisance was abated. This, the neighbors declare, Mr. Glazier has not done and they now want to make the injunction permanent.

Other witnesses called were Dr. F. W. Westcott, of Fanwood, who stated that Mr. Glazier had promised about two years ago to remove his plant. He said that he had talked to the defendant several times about the odor arising from the place. Counsel for the complainants attempted to get in evidence a report from the State Board of Health, but defendant's counsel succeeded in keeping it out because it was not official.

Raymond Schenck, of West End avenue, stated that he was employed to build a pigeon house on the property owned by Charles F. Hess, about opposite the Glazier place, and the stench was so bad when an east wind was blowing that it made him sick at his stomach and he could not eat his dinner.

Charles F. Hess, owner of the property where Mr. Schenck was employed, described as best he could odors coming from the factory. He purchased the property from F. M. Masker, but added that he would not have done so had he known of the presence of the factory. He considered it a decided nuisance. He always detected the odors when an east wind was blowing. At this time the court adjourned until 2 o'clock, when the hearing was resumed.

DR. GALBRAITH IS DEAD

Promising Young Dentist Succumbs to Complication of Troubles in Hospital.

HE EARNED HIS EDUCATION.

Succeeded in Struggle For University Decree But His Life Is Closed In Early Manhood.

Dr. Edwin Galbraith, for many years regarded as one of the most progressive and promising young men in the city and one who rose to a position of affluence through the hardest kind of work, died this morning in the Alexian Brothers hospital, Elizabeth. Though he had been undergoing treatment at the institution for several weeks few of his Plainfield friends were aware of his illness and news of his headth came as a great surprise. He was stricken with a fever that was quickly followed by heart trouble and he had been sinking steadily since Friday. Members of his family were at his bedside when the end came.

Dr. Galbraith was twenty-eight years old and was the son of Maria and the late Peter Galbraith, of West Fourth street. He was educated in the Plainfield schools and on completing his course determined to take up dentistry as a profession. He was without funds to provide his way through college but with an indomnitable will set about getting them. How hard he struggled is known only to his closest friends but in the end he succeeded and was given his degree by the Universiay of Pennsylvania a year ago last June. He opened offices in Paterson and was enjoying a spledid practice when the fatal illness came upon him.

As a boy, Dr. Galbraith was always employing his spare moments in learning somethhng and his accomplishments were the envy of his schoolmates. He was an expert wirewalker, a drum major, a musician and a barber and employed them all in getting his college money. His course was interrupted on two occasions for lack of funds and he obtained the necessary money by working for Dr. Stack, of Hoboken, during his candidacy for mayor. He was a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles in that city and was very popular there.

Beside his mother, he is survived by four brothers, Martin, Daniel, Joseph and Pete, all of Plainfield. The body will be brought to this city this afternoon.

Street Gang Worked Yesterday.

Contractor Foley and his pavers worked all day yesterday laying brick on Watchung avenue and West Front street and it is believed that with continued good weather they will finish this part of the work not later than tomorrow. Contractor Meeker's concreting gang also worked yesterday. If the weather remains favorable it may be decided to continue the pavement work. In the opinion of some the action of the street committee to shut off at this time is a mistake, for the reason that there may be two or three weeks of good weather, in the event of which a great deal could be accomplished. F. A. Dunham, civil engineer, who has had much experience in this work, is one of those who expressed this opinion.

German Society in Singing Comedy.

A musical sketch, "Die Kurierten Freier," was the feature of the monthly social of the Gesang und Turn Verein held at Saengerbund Hall Saturday night. Those who took part were Charles Dressell, Henry Haurand, Alfred Luthman and Otto Keller. There was special music by the singing section and recitation by Anton Wolff, Herman Klinsman and Mrs. Breitner. Prof. Vollhaus, of New York, pleased the large attendance by his rendition of several of his own compositions on the piano. The usual social hour, with refreshments, followed the evening's entertainment.

Robert Reed Attacked by Dog.

To New York for Operation.

Miss Nellie Vermeule, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Vermeule, of Jackson avenue, was removed today to the infirmary for women at Fifteenth street and Seventh avenue, New York, where she will be operated upon for kidney trouble.

WANT TO BE ASSESSOR?

Then File Your Application with Mayor Fisk Before Monday, Dec. 23.

SUGGESTIONS ALSO WELCOMED.

The Mayor Promises to Name the Very Best Men for the Place for the Coming Year.

Candidates for positions on the new Board of Assessors must file their applications with Mayor Charles J. Fisk before December 23 if they want to have their names considered. This statement was made this morning by the mayor himself when approached by a representative of The Daily Press as to whom he intends to appoint on January 1, when the terms of the present members expire.

It will be the duty of the mayor to nominate and with the approval and consent of the Common Council to appoint four assessors, one from each ward to succeed the present incumbents. The present membership consists of H. C. VanEmburgh, First ward; Charles H. Hand, Second ward; Joseph A. Hubbard, Third ward, and Harry W. Runyon, Fourth ward. Their terms expire on January 1 and it is said that there may be some decided changes for the new year.

When asked whether there were any candidates for the jobs, Mayor Fisk said: "I have made no promises in regard to these appointments and have not decided who I will appoint. I might say that I have asked the chairman of the Republican City Committee to call his committee together and that if they make any recommendations I shall give them due consideration."

Continuing, Mayor Fisk said: "I have received no applicants or suggestions from anyone. You might say that I am very anxious to make appointments of men well qualified to fill the office and men who will be entirely satisfactory and will have the confidence of the taxpayers. Any applications or suggestions, I should like to have on or before Monday, December 23. I will make one promise now; I will give all applications and suggestions due and impartial consideration and will do my best to select the very best men for the positions."

UNKNOWN MAN KILLED.

Struck by an Express Train Opposite Cranford Station.

A Jersey Central express passing the Cranford station at 10:56 last night, struck and instantly killed an unknown man who had just previously alighted from a freight train. The body was hurled to one side and life was extinct when it was picked up. It was brought to this city and is being held for identification at Cole's undertaking rooms.

The man was evidently about thirty years old, of medium build and wore clothing of good material. From cards in his pockets it is thought he was a seaman and was on his way from Philadelphia to New York when killed. Pieces of paper and letters indicated that he had friends in Liverpool, England, while another one read: "Annie Pitchford, 15 Sewall street, Roxbury, Boston."

Goes to Brazil.

Miss Angie Kuhl, of Somerville, who is well known in this city and who was a member of the class of '99 in the Plainfield High School, sailed Friday for Brazil where she will be head instructor of music in the schools of a large city. Miss Kuhl has been very successful in following this profession and her selection for the position was made from among many candidates. A number of Plainfield friends accompanied her to the pier before taking her departure.

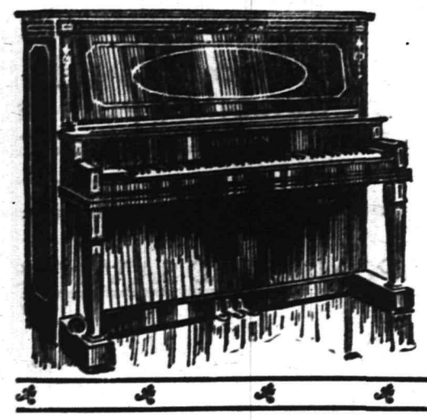
The Best Pianos For Gift Giving

THE piano is unquestionably the Christmas gift par excellence, for there is nothing more ornamental or artistic, nothing that will add more to the pleasure of the recipient or the entertainment of the whole family and its guests than the piano.

While costly, the piano lasts for many years and really improves in quality with usage if it is a good one, so that by spreading the cost over the many years of use one can figure it really an economical gift. Besides, all pianos, whether high or low in price, can be bought on the Club Plan, which enables you to pay a moderate amount down and small monthly payments thereafter.

We represent in Newark and vicinity a galaxy of pianos the equal of which is found in no other Newark establishment. We challenge comparison with any other piano store in New Jersey. These makes have national and international fame.

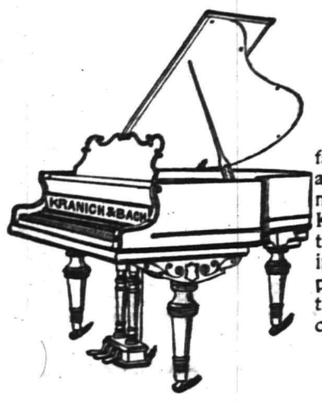
HARDMAN



Hardman Pianos have been known and used in this country for more than half a century for their musical superiority and durability, and in the beauty of the cases no piano at a moderate price excels the Hardman. It is in every particular an instrument of the first rank. More than 60,000 Hardman pianos have been sold, many of them in Newark and round about. These celebrated instruments contain many patents and improvements which give them a musical quality and durability difficult to surpass.

Prices $390 to $1,000

KRANICH & BACH



Perhaps the most artistic member of our piano family—at least it is one of the finest pianos built at any price, and has stood well among the leaders for many, many years. It is made solely and wholly by Kranich & Bach—not simply gathered in parts and put together; manufactured entire from keyboards to cases in their own factories by men with the musical temperament; lacking absolutely nothing that is essentially characteristic of the highest class pianos. We cannot commend the Kranich & Bach too highly.

Prices $425 to $1,000

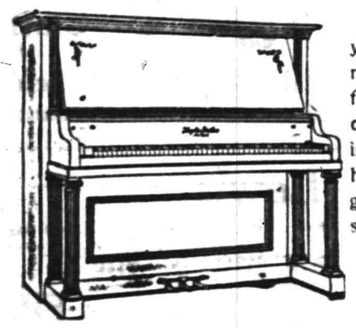
Gabler

Gabler Pianos are made by a family of artisans running thru three generations, and as might be expected embody the highest ideals in piano construction. The Gabler has long commanded the admiration of musicians, and is everywhere recognized as a high-grade instrument.

Gabler Pianos contain inventions which are distinguishing features and are recognized as marking a distinct advance in the art of piano making.

Prices $375 to $1,000

Hazelton



Hazelton Pianos are also numbered in the fifty-year-old class—three generations of expert piano makers have devoted their lives and energies to the fulfilment of the first promise of the original creators of the Hazelton piano—each generation in turn having brought to bear all the cumulative skill and inherited love of art to push the Hazelton piano to the goal of their ambitions, which has been nothing short of perfection.

Prices $450 to $800

HAHNE & CO.

Naturally enough a piano that bears our name must be a good one, and if we named the factory in which the Hahne pianos are built we would need say no more to convince you of the excellence of the instrument.

In the Hahne Piano we have a splendid instrument at a moderate price—beautiful in design, sweet in tone, easy to the touch, durable in construction. It is a modern instrument in every particular and will delight all who come into possession of one.

Price $250 to $400.

Ruckstuhl

The Ruckstuhl Piano is an honestly built instrument that has made many friends in the ranks of music lovers. It has been manufactured for many years and has made a position and reputation for itself as a first-class, durable piano, pleasing to the most critical people and to those desiring good musical qualities combined with durability without paying an extravagant price. Improvements are introduced in the Ruckstuhl which make it greatly to be desired. The action is splendid, the tonal qualities exceptionally good.

Prices $275 to $400.

Hensel.

Here is an instrument that can be highly commended because of its beautiful case and superior internal mechanism—built to stand lots of usage, yet sweet in tone, easy in action, a truly remarkable piano at the low price at which we sell it.

A good piano for schools, public halls, hotels or boarding houses, because it can well stand the treatment bound to be accorded an instrument when used by many different persons. A piano for all people.

Price $250.

Spencer.

While the lowest priced instrument in our stock, the Spencer is not by any means a trashy piano. Instead it is built for both durability and good musical qualities, and is particularly well adapted to those who are likely to give a piano hard usage, or those who are providing an instrument for a child to practise upon while yet uncertain as to the little one's musical abilities. Those not wishing to invest a large amount in a piano will find the Spencer much to their liking—surprisingly good in fact.

Price $185

HARDMAN AUTOTONE

This wonderful self-playing piano which can be played with equal facility by hand or with the perforated music roll is attaining extraordinary popularity. Busy housewives unable to keep brushed up musically, and busier businessmen who perhaps have never had an opportunity to learn to play find the Hardman Autotone a great relief for they have the music of the masters at their command at any time they desire it, and they can play it without waiting for some accomplished one to volunteer or be coaxed to play.

The Hardman Autotone has all the superior quality an an instrument possessed by the regular Hardman piano, and is just as beautiful in construction and design.

Prices $550 to $800

Hahne & Co., Piano Warerooms, Second Floor Newark, N. J.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

BASEBALL.

The story has been revived and comes out of Chicago to the effect that at the meeting of the American League to be held at the Auditorium Hotel there on Wednesday a combination headed by Charles A. Comiskey of the Chicago White Sox will attempt to force Ban Johnson from the office of president. It is stated that Comiskey will be backed up by John I. Taylor, of Boston; C. W. Somers and John T. Kilfoyle, of Cleveland, and Joe Cantillion, of the Washington club. Comiskey has been at swords' points with Johnson on several previous occasions because of the fact that Johnson has been careless enough to suppress rowdy ball playing by the Sox. The feud was patched up last winter and the two men appeared to be as friendly as ever, but with the failure of the Sox to win the pennant again this year came another outburst from Comiskey, usually a level headed and conservative man.

Comiskey's chief ally is Cantillion, a talkative person who was taken out of the minor leagues by Johnson and placed in control of the Washington team. Cantillion has since developed into a first class trouble-maker who, it is said, has been the means of stirring up Comiskey again. The Chicago yarn goes on to state that Taylor, of Boston, is bitter in his feelings toward Johnson because of the failure of the Boston club to secure Jake Stahl, while the grievances, so called, of the Cleveland people, are said to be of long standing. Granted that Comiskey is able to have four clubs lined up against Johnson it is doubtful if he can do much harm, for the excellent reason that the owners of the other four clubs have always appreciated Johnson and his administration of the American League's affairs. The New York club, for instance, has always been a firm believer in Johnson and his policies. President Farrell, the owner of the New York club, when asked Saturday what he knew about the opposition to Johnson, said with much emphasis:

"I believe there is some slight friction, but there is no basis for it. Johnson has always been on the level and has practically made the American League what it is today—the best circuit in this country. He has been straightforward and aboveboard in his dealings with everybody in baseball and is a big man in the management of the game. The New York club does not favor bickering or peanut politics but is an advocate of clean sport and high class baseball. Johnson has always been a stickler for this kind of play and has succeeded in winning an immense amount of public patronage for our league as a result. With all of the clubs enjoying prosperity I believe that Johnson, because of his diplomacy and skilful management, is entitled to the bulk of the credit and for that reason you can say that the New York club will stand for him no matter what may crop up at the Chicago meeting. But really it is hard to believe that the alleged opposition to Johnson will amount to more than a little hot air."

FOOTBALL.

The latest development in football schedule making is a triple alliance among Harvard, Yale and Princeton. A deal of this kind has been rumored for some time, but it is said that at the recent Harvard-Yale game representatives of all three colleges got together and talked the matter over. Yale already plays Harvard and Princeton, so it only remains for Princeton and Harvard to schedule a game and then the arrangements is completed. According to one who is on the inside of such matters and a graduate of Harvard, the deal is as good as made. He says the formal papers will be signed soon, when the dates of the games will be fixed. Princeton and Harvard have not played each other since 1896.

According to the same authority, it was suggested at the conference that the deal be made four cornered, which would take in Pennsylvania. This was agreeable on the whole, but the predjuice of some of the influential Princeton graduates will have to be overcome before the scheme can be put through. Regarding the Harvard-Princeton compact the gentleman mentioned above, who is responsible for the information, said:

"I am sure Princeton and Harvard have fixed matters so that a football game between them is again an assured thing. Another suggestion is that Pennsylvania play Princeton, the student bodies of both being strongly in favor of such a game, the opposition of a few Princeton alumni notwithstanding." Manager Disston, of the Pennsylvania football team, said he knew nothing regarding Cornell's plan to play alternately in Ithaca and Philadelphia.

PRAYERS FOR CONDEMNED FILIBUSTER FROM JERSEY

George H. Vice, who was captured in Brazil with nine other Americans and condemned to death as filibusters, is a Hackensack boy. He was employed as a clerk in the office of the Public Service Corporation there up to five weeks ago, when he left on an expedition. He is a member of Company G. National Guard of New Jersey, and is 25 years old. His widowed mother, who went to the State Department at Washington, D. C., on Friday with Capt. Frank Koester, returned home yesterday almost broken hearted.

Prosecutor Ernest Koester, of Hackensack, interested himself in the case of young Vice, and communicated with his brother, who is a captain in the United States Army. Capt. Koester will exercise all the influence possible to have young Vice from being shot.

Mrs. Vice says her son was deceived by the manager of the expedition, Sebastian Magale, who engaged him as a cook, and said he was going to take several men to guard a mine in New Mexico. For that reason young Vice bought a military uniform and revolver. Before leaving Hackensack Vice told his mother that they expected a long trip overland on horses, and that it might be months before she would hear from him. She accidentally saw a story in a morning newspaper telling of the capture of the expedition, and although her son's name was spelled wrong, she realized that it was intended for him.

Mrs. Vice has the letters which Magali wrote to her son.

The Rev. Dr. Kuehler of the Presbyterian church of Hackensack prayed for the condemned youth at yesterday morning's service.

better than man in his present position, but that superman will be the same man in the ages to come.

"Bernard Shaw says it is no use to pray for there is nothing above you but a blundering life-force. Your whole soul cries out for the living God, the personal God, and Scripture says he is interested in your personal life and its problems, and that all things are working for your eternal good because you love him."

SAID OF WOMEN.

From the Danish—A truth telling woman finds few friends.

An all tempered woman is the devil's doornail.

Give your wife the short knife, keep the long one for yourself.

A bad wife likes to see her husband's heels turned to the door.

He who marries a widow with three children marries four thieves.

From the Italian—The born beauty is born betrothed.

Women and hens are lost by gadding.

When woman resigns the devil governs.

In craft woman can give points to the devil.

A woman's in pain, a woman's in woe, a woman is ill when she likes to be so.

A woman who loves to be at the window is like a bunch of grapes at the wayside.

RECEPTION TO ITS TEAM

Dance Given at City High School to Members of the Football Eleven.

SPEECHES MADE BY MEMBERS.

"Football Cotillion" a Novel Feature of the Dancing, When Undergraduates Won from Alumni.

Attended by about a hundred pupils and almuni of the city high school, the reception and dance given for the school football eleven in the high school auditorium Saturday night proved the most successful social function given at the school this season. The affair was under the auspices of the girls' athletic association of the school, of which Miss Esther Crampton is president. The evening was spent in dancing, and there were eight dances on the cards. Music for the dancing was furnished by the tel-electric piano player, recently purchased by the pupils of the school.

After the first dance, the members of the school football eleven were asked to take seats on the auditorium platform with Principal Ira W. Travell, Lindsey Best, of the faculty, who coached the team, and Roy Phillips, who was field coach and referee during the season. In the name of the girls' athletic association of the school, Miss Esther Crampton presented Capt. Charles Loizeaux, of the eleven, with a huge bunch of yellow chrysanthemums, and he distributed the flowers among the players.

Principal Travell made a short address, summarizing the work of the team during the season, and read a clever Homeric parody in a discription of the assembling of the football "host" for the conflict, using the names of the school players. Lindsey Best, the coach, then spoke of the season's work on the gridiron. He said that the results of the games were, after all, of minor importance as compared to the spirit shown by the players on the field and he commended this fighting school spirit shown by the members of the eleven in the season's games. He referred to the fact that the team had played more hard games than easy ones, and expressed his gratification at the spirit shown and the support given him by the players in the practises.

Roy Phillips, who has officiated as referee in the season's games, was the next speaker. He commended especially the clean, sportsmanlike behavior of the eleven in play and in receiving decisions of the official—"a time when a man's ideas of the referee's justice are generally warped." Stanley Parsons, manager of the team, spoke briefly on his work during the season and reported a small balance for the association treasury.

"Charlie" Loizeaux, captain of the team, was then called upon. Gritty enough as quarterback of the team, he had to utilize most of his "ninety per cent. nerve" makeup to make his short speech, in which he thanked the girls' association for the reception and the school for the support of the team. He spoke of the excellent support given him by the players as captain of the team, commenting especially upon the work of Halfback Chauncey Murphy as temporary captain early in the season. In conclusion he presented Mr. Best with a pair of gold cuff buttons, given by the football eleven in appreciation of his season's work as coach.

A novel feature of the dancing was the "football cotillion" late in the evening. The dance was arranged by Stanley Korner and eight couples took part in the "game." Four of the alumni present, with their partners, represented an alumni team and four other couples an undergraduate team. A football was punted by the "players" partners in turn and the man catching the ball danced with the girl who punted. The members of the undergraduate "team" were all dancing before each of the alumni players could gain the ball, and the school team was declared the winner.

$15,000,000,000 IN AMERICAN PRODUCTS.

Fifteen billions of dollars represents the value of the annual production of manufacturers in the United States. Colonel John M. Carson, chief of the Bureau of Manufacturers, makes this statement in the annual report of the operations of his bureau. The figures do not represent finished products entirely, but include products in various stages of progress.

The aggregate value of domestic merchandise exported last year was $1,854,000,000, an increase of nearly $136,000,000 over the preceding year. In this classification "manufacturers ready for consumption" are credited with $400,000,000, and these figures are generally accepted as the extent of the exports of manufacturers. The report of the bureau, however, groups this classification with those of "foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured," and "manufactures for further use in manufacturing," the aggregate exports of which last year were $606,000,000, and this amount added to "manufactures ready for consumption" makes the aggregate value of manufactures exported in the year ended June 30, $1,086,000,000, or more than 58 per cent. of the entire exports for that year.

Special significance is attached to the increase of nearly $30,000,000 in the exports of completed manufactures, in view of the fact that the exports of cotton cloths declined more than $21,000,000, this loss being entirely in the trade with China. Popular feeling aroused in that country, growing out of alleged outrages against Chinese residents in the United States, is assigned as a contributory cause for this decline.

The cottonseed product exports for the year were upward of $40,500,000, an increase of $9,500,000 over 1906. In commenting on these figures the report says:

"Aside from its intrinsic value this relatively new industry has an economic value and importance to the country, the beneficial results of which are especially felt in the several States in which cotton is indigenous and in which the cottonseed industry is naturally located."

The success attending investigation by experts sent abroad has led to the adoption of the policy of specializing investigations of trade conditions in foreign markets.

One of the obstacles to the enlargement of export trade is the uncertainty of transit between places of production and the seaboard. Merchants in the Orient especially complain that calculation cannot be made as to when goods ordered in the United States will be delivered, and in consequence orders go to European houses that should come to those of this country. The beureau has been in correspondence with managers of railway and ocean steamship companies with a view to obtaining more reliable and rapid transit for merchandise destined for foreign countries.

Demands made by business men for the extension of the parcels post to foreign countries are discussed. It is alleged that this extension would open markets now closed to American business men for lack of transportation facilities, but which are open to their competitors, who have advantage of the parcels post system.

A Hopeless Lunatic.

"Yes, sir," said the strange looking individual, "we are entirely satisfied with the flat we hhve now. There is plenty of room, the neighbors never bother us, no one within hearing plays the piano, there are no children in the block, my wife has no trouble in keeping help, and the janitor is so kind and obliging that the heat is always exactly right, and—"

But they didn't wait to hear any more. They simply held him gently but firmly, while someone went and 'phoned for a padded ambulance from the insane asylum.—Behemian.

DISEASE ANNIHILATED.

At Battle Creek, Mich., and at Physical Culture City, New Jersey, are two sanatoriums filled with suffering humanity, like which there are none other in the country. They are conducted by Bernarr Macfadden, who will lecture at The Casino on the evening of Wednesday, December 11th. Patients are received from all parts of the country and immediately put on a physical culture diet and started on the road to renewed health by means of exercise, etc., particularly prescribed in each individual case, by competent practitioners. Absolutely no drugs are used in the treatment. In his lecture Mr. Macfadden will tell how some of his wonderful cures are brought about.

The photographs herewith are those of Mr. J. W. Sturm, of Corsicana, Texas. Mr. Sturm came to Mr. Macfadden's Battle Creek Sanatorium a nervous wreck. He had suffered from acute stomach trouble for several years, and had taken treatment from various physicians and at numberless sanatoriums, but without results. Though naturally a large man, when he entered the Bernarr Macfadden Sanatorium at Battle Creek, he weighed but 112 pounds. About five weeks after the beginning of treatment, he had increased in strength to an amazing degree and had gained nearly forty pounds in weight. On seeing this patient on arrival and again in five weeks, one would not have recognized him without a very close scrutiny of his features. The two photographs shown are evidence enough of this statement.

J. W. Sturm, Corsicana, Texas.

Bernarr Macfadden believes that disease is a sin, that we are all born healthy, that if your strength is below par, you have no business to let it remain so; that if you have enough vitality to retain life while you are in a condition of weakness or disease, you have sufficient on which can be built a high degree of health. The results which are being achieved at Battle Creek amply verify this conclusion. If some of the cures we report are made in medical circles, they would be announced throughout the world as triumphs of so-called medical science.

GUARANTEED HEALTH.

In this day of deceit and chicanery of medical quacks and worthless patent medicines which Mr. Macfadden in his magazine, "PHYSICAL CULTURE," has been fighting for years, it is easy and simple for any one to claim to cure all diseases. Mr. Macfadden realizes that in persuading suffering humanity to try his Physical Culture treatment, he has to first overcome the prejudices any reasoning person, particularly those who have been deceived by medical quacks, and others, may have against any new method of treating diseases. But remember, Mr. Macfadden's treatment is not new, it is only getting back to first principles. It is a case of first getting your daily life to moving along the right lines, and then allowing Nature to work out her own cure.

Therefore, that all prejudices may be swept aside at one fell swoop he guarantees to cure disease, and makes this proposition: If after carefully and systematically following his treatment at one of his sanatoriums for a reasonable length of time, no material change for the better is brought about in your condition, he will present you with a receipted bill for your treatment, board and lodging. He does everything buy pay you for the time you spend with him.

Call at his hotel and ask him about this when he is in your city, or better yet, right now drop a letter to him at his main office, Flat Iron Building, New York.

WILL BUILD $125,000 HOME.

E. P. Earle Starts Fine Residence in Montclair—Has Difference with Building Department.

Montclair, Dec. 9.—E. P. Earle, president of the Nipissing Copper Company, has broken ground here for one of the finest residences in this section of New Jersey. The structure, which is to be built on the "triangle" at the junction of Highland avenue, Edgewood terrace and Holmes place, is to cost in the neighborhood of $125,000, and the site, it is said, cost $50,000.

There is a probability that the work on the substructure will be stopped. Building Inspector Jesse Lockwood states that the plans have not yet been filed, and until this is done the contractor has no legal right to proceed with the job. The residence will be three stories in height and will have a frontage of not less than 210 feet.

COMPOSER'S LIFE SUMMARIZED.

Rev. A. C. McCrea Speaks on Haydn's Life and Compositions Before Large Congregation—His Masterpiece.

A masterful rendition of selections from Haydn's oratorio. "The Creation," adapted from Milton's famous pen, was given by the full choir of the First M. E. church in charge of Organist and Choirmaster J. Edmund Skiff at the regular evening service at the church last night. The church was filled to its seating capacity and the choruses, recitatives and airs of the famous composer's masterpiece were received with highest appreciation. In place of the regular sermon, the pastor, Rev. A. C. McCrea, gave a brief outline of the life of the famous symphonist and composer, and an explanation of the oratorio.

Speaking of the composer, Johann Michael Haydn, the pastor commenced with a summary of the life and environment of the great composer. He was born in lower Austria, March 31, 1732, and spent much of his life in London. Displaying remarkable musical ability from his boyhood, he was appointed choirmaster of St. Stephen's church, Vienna, at the early age of twelve years. Here he remained as singer for several years, until his changing voice compelled him to give up vocal work. He then devoted himself to instrumental music, later becoming famous as a pianist and violinist and as a composer of symphonies, which he produced to the number of 125 in the course of his life. A lad born of humble parents, his percocity in a musical way has brought him to the first rank of the composers.

"The Creation" was the work of the latter years of his life, his musical masterpiece. It was through Sullivan's influence that the work was produced, for Sullivan had suggested the idea of the composition to Handel, but he failed to take advantage of it. Haydn was at this time sixty-five years of age and the composition was the work of three years. Its composition was inspired by the author's devotions, he claims, for the author was constantly at his devotions during the years of his work on the piece. Tradition says that Haydn sought the inspiration for his wonderful choruses and airs from prayer and meditation and approached his work with the deepest feelings of religious sentiment. He died at the age of 77 years, and his masterpiece, coming as it did in the last years of his life, is in striking contrast to the work of other great musical composers, for both Mozart and Beethoven were short lived and did their greatest work in their youth.

Aside from "The Creation," Haydn is probably best known as the composer of the Austrian national hymn. He also composed the cantata, "The Seven Words," and the oratorio, "The Seasons." His instrumental compositions include some eighty sonatas and quartets.

The presentation of the selections from the oratorio began with a "Representation of Chaos," by Organist J. Edmund Skiff. Those who took the parts, assisted by the full chorus choir of twenty-six voices, were Vincent B. Miner, baritone; Miss Bertha Van Nuis Willis, soprano; Louis Olsen Barton, tenor, and Charles G. Gallup, bass. The offertory, "Saviour, Like a Shepherd," was rendered by Miss Suzanne Zimmerman.

RICHEST MAN IN SENATE IS SIMON GUGGENHEIM.

The most spectacular figure among the new men in the United States Senate is Simon Guggenheim, who succeeds Thomas M. Patterson as Senator from Colorado. He is not only the richest man in the Senate, but the youngest as well, being but 40 years of age. He is the next to the youngest son of Meyer Guggenheim, a Swiss emigrant, who came over in the steerage in 1848, peddled shoe polish, learned its manufacture, prospered, sold embroidery and prospered more, invested in a Colorado silver mine and in order to save the investment went into smelting ores, finally organizing the American Smelting and Refining Company, otherwise known as the Smelter Trust combination, which through Guggenheim and his seven sons, controlled $500,000,000.

Senator Guggenheim is one of these seven brothers. He is supposed to be worth upwards of $100,000,000. Since William A. Clark, of Montana, has left the Senate this probably leaves Guggenheim with the brighest financial escutcheon. This suggests the interesting data that Senator Elkins is supposed to be worth $20,000,000. Senator Aldrich, Senator Nixon and Senator Kean, $10,000,000 apiece. Senator Proctor $7,000,000 and a dozen other Senators more than $3,000,000 apiece.

Guggenheim is purely a business man and will never set the Potomac on fire with statesmanship or eloquence. The charge has been made that he bought his Senatorship and paid what he thought it was worth to him as a business transaction. He denies the charge and says his prominent position in Colorado brought him the honor and that he has cast from him any business connection that would conflict with his duties as a Senator.

Reliable Money Lenders

WANT TO RAISE MONEY?

Can you think of any place you can get it quicker than from us, and with as little trouble? Can you think of any place where money will be advanced to you more willingly or where you will receive more courteous treatment? Can you think of any one who will accommodate you with large or small deals on such liberal terms and allow such generous time for settlement?

If you call we shall be pleased to explain everything and if you borrow from us you are assured

1st. A SQUARE DEAL FROM START TO FINISH.
2nd. AS LOW RATES AS CAN BE MADE BY ANY FIRM WHICH MEETS ITS CUSTOMERS HALF WAY AND TREATS THEM FAIRLY.
3rd. A STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL TRANSACTION IN EVERY RESPECT.
4th. A MOST LIBERAL REBATE ON PAYMENTS NOT DUE AT DATE OF SETTLEMENT OF YOUR ACCOUNT IN CASE YOU PAY UP IN SHORTER TIME THAN SPECIFIED IN YOUR CONTRACT.

Our proposition is good all the way through. If you cannot call, a postal or telephone will bring us to you.

Our representative calls in Plainfield on Wednesdays.

The possession of household goods is sufficient evidence of your ability to pay.

The CASTLE of LIES

BY ARTHUR HENRY VERSEY

(COPYRIGHT, 1906, by D. APPLETON & COMPANY)

We were making the last steep ascent to the village. We crossed the noisy stream; the driver cracked his long whip; we passed under a dilapidated arch; we were rattling over the cobblestones of a winding street.

It was too dark for me to see much of the quaint beauty of this picturesque village. I caught a glimpse of the timbered Rathaus, its gilt clock proudly conspicuous on the squat tower, and of the fountain in front of it, its basin radiant with scarlet flowers. There were little shops dimly lighted, their wares heaped about the doors and windows.

But I Was Not Blind to the Cool Glance That Measured.

As we passed, women and children dropped delighted courtesies, and the men took pipes from broadly grinning mouths and doffed their hats. Evidently Madame de Varnier was loved by this simple folk.

"You seem to be very welcome," I said smiling, surprised that the villagers should have greeted her so cordially. "You are the Lady Bountiful to these simple people, I suppose."

She smiled faintly. "I have been here for two summers. I am the event of the year in their stupid lives. I try to bring them a little pleasure. When I leave I like to think that they remember me with love."

"Then I should not have said that the glamour of romance is always associated with dishonor," I ventured boldly.

"I can see no glamour in this obscure village," she replied, yawning.

"But the chateau is a part of the village?" I persisted.

"Monsieur!" she cried passionately. "You weary me with senseless questions."

I smiled quietly. I wished Madame de Varnier to know definitely that it depended on her playing the part of Circe or Lady Bountiful whether the armed truce was to continue, or whether there was to be open warfare.

We turned at an abrupt angle from the village street. We were entering a mere passageway just wide enough for the carriage. It was flanked on either side by the houses of the village; over the arch, too, was a dwelling. Suddenly we emerged in a courtyard large enough to permit a squadron of cavalry to perform its evolutions. A low wall inclosed it. We drew up at the doorway. I was welcomed by Madame de Varnier with exaggerated deference. We were at her Castle of Happiness.

I felt the insincerity of the welcome. They looked on me as a puppet to move only when they pulled the strings. I saw, too, that I had not left in the hotel at Vitznau the character of Sir Mortimer Brett.

But before the next day was past I determined to know once for all the reason of this deception. I was determined to put an end to this farce.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Death-Mask Again.

One does not expect to find in Switzerland grace and charm in architecture. There are no historic chateaux worthy of a pilgrimage. This castle of Alterhoffen gave one the simple impression of sheer strength. It was primitive and savage and bare of pretense to beauty as its founder must have been.

A rather squat tower of immense solidity, the roof steeply sloping, the windows narrow and few, it would have been commonplace and ugly in the extreme had it not been for three smaller semicircular towers placed at each angle of the larger one. The effect of this triangular-shaped tower, with its three supporting towers, was bizarre, but not unpleasing. It prepared one for an interior unique and interesting.

We passed beneath the arched doorway, severe and bare of ornament, into the great hall. At the left was the grand stairway, the balustrades of oak massive and dark with age, but admirably carved. At the end of the hall, on the right, a fire of logs was blazing brightly. The hooded mantel, Gothic in design, was also of oak and blackened with the smoke of centuries. A stand of banners stood near the foot of the stairway. Not far from the fireplace was a curious spiral staircase leading to the gallery that ran the length of the room above. Tapestries covered the bare walls and filled the spaces between the narrow windows that looked out on the courtyard. The furniture was of the period of the French Renaissance—covered for the most part with stamped leather of gold and dull red.

I could not repress a cry of delight as I entered. I had passed in an instant from the world of commonplace hotels and railway trains into an atmosphere of charm and beauty. For no matter how industriously the connoisseur in America may gather about him exquisite and beautiful things, he cannot shut out the scream of the railroad train; he cannot transplant across the seas the charm of mediævalism that clings to castle walls. It is one thing to see the Cluny with a guide book; it is quite another to find one's self a guest at the Cluny.

"It promises its adventures," I replied meaningly.

"I have told you that your hour of romance has come. But remember, romance in these prosaic days is a gift of the gods given only to children and poets, a few women and lovers, and to the very bold. If you would claim the gift, monsieur, you must have something of the nature of all of these. The sincere trust of the child, you must certainly know what this is, monsieur. The poet's imagination, his delightful power of make-believe, you must not despise that. A woman's tenderness, and a lover's ardor, these, too, are necessary. And last of all, the daring of the hero."

She had whispered these rather comprehensive attributes as I walked across the hall to the staircase, following the servant with my bag.

"A rather large bill, madam," I suggested humorously.

"Oh, but I am serious, very serious. I assure you that it is not sentimental talk."

"I am afraid I must contradict you. The daring of the hero, for instance, even one so optimistic as yourself could scarcely expect that of me."

"Monsieur," she protested earnestly, "I have already told you that I refuse to believe you a coward. Do you believe it yourself? You know you do not. The task I am to give you would appall any but the bravest heart. It requires audacity, absolute assurance, and a clever brain. But I believe in you. You will not disappoint me. We dine in half an hour."

Dr. Starva had stood with his back to the fire. He called after me, scowling, as I ascended the stairs:

"You will find, as I have said, that madam is an admirable host. But if the guest is to be quite happy he must accept the diversions madam offers and when they are offered."

It was not the words so much as the tone that menaced. It emphasized the conviction I already felt: Dr. Starva did not welcome my coming to the castle. As I reached the gallery I saw Madame de Varnier address him almost fiercely. I was not blind to his sullen contempt, though evidently the woman was the ruling spirit here.

The suite allotted me was at the end of a gloomy corridor. I threw open one of the narrow windows. The noisy stream below, beating futilely against the walls, almost deafened the voice of the servant as he asked if he could be of assistance to me. I looked out. There was a sheer drop of some 50 feet.

That fact vaguely disconcerted me. The words of Dr. Starva were a jarring note that sobered my excitement. When I had dressed I was almost prepared to find the massive door of my chamber locked or barred. I had entered the spider's web audaciously enough. To escape might be less simple.

The dinner was simply but well served in a small dining-room. Had my situation been less serious I might have felt some humor at the elaborate deference shown me by my companions for the benefit of the two servants who waited on us. Even Dr. Starva followed the lead of Madame de Varnier in solemn if cynical obedience.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Lyman H. Howe is beyond dispute the most famous exhibitor of moving pictures in the world today. For many years his exhibitions have been an unfailing source of pleasure and profit to many thousands throughout the entire United States. The secret of his success is no mystery. Added to his rare faculty of selecting only pictures of absorbing interest, is his unusual ability for reproducing them so vividly and graphically that his exhibition is not approached by any other in this country or abroad. He reproduces every scene and event with every detail exactly as it is or happened, so that you virtually see and even hear it yourself. The new program, to be shown at the New Plainfield theatre next Thursday night, comprises just those living, vital things in which we are all most interested at this moment. It is par excellence the exhibition of today—of this twentieth century.

In Henry Miller's production of "The Great Divide," which will be seen for the first time in this city at the New Plainfield theatre next Saturday afternoon and night, two picturesque and decidedly unusual scenes are disclosed. One is a cactus farm in South Arizona and the other is a home made house on a plateau high up in the Cordillera mountains. These scenes are veritable triumps of art and form a striking contrast to the one in which the final act takes place, a typical New England home of the better class. No expense has been spared to make the production perfect in every detail and the cast selected and rehearsed by Mr. Miller give a perfect performance of this truly great American play.

One thing accomplished by Sidney R. Ellis, manager of Golden-voiced Al H. Wilson, who appears in this city next Monday night, is the building up of a clientele commensurate with the abilities of this popular comedian. Mr. Ellis is also the author of the several plays in which Mr. Wilson has scored such great success, and his latest, the new "Metz in the Alps," is said to be by far his greatest efforts. Picked at random from the titles of Mr. Wilson's new songs that he will render during his forthcoming engagement is "Fairest Flower of All," the music of which is especially pleasant and catchy.

The attention of renters of Safe Deposit boxes in New York is called to the fact that New York State levies a tax on the contents of the Safe Deposit box of a non-resident at his or her death, which tax may, of course, be avoided by keeping one's valuables in the same State in which one resides. It is, therefore, greatly to the advantage of a resident of New Jersey to keep personal property in a Safe Deposit box within the State.

"Gym" Work at Y. W. C. A.

About eighty young women and girls are now registered in the gymnasium department of the Y. W. C. A., where they are getting systematic hygenic exercise, together with wholesome fun in the form of basketball and other indoor competitive games. The gymnasium is small, but it is well equipped and convenient and affords excellent opportunity for young women to get regular exercise during the winter months. Those interested are invited to visit the gymnasium and those who would like to join and have no suit are requested to speak to Miss Tapping, the secretary.

Sues Freeholders for $50.

Joseph Kingston, a contracting mason of East Second street, has begun suit against the Union County Board of Freeholders to recover $50 which he claims is due him for work performed on the Leland avenue bridge, near Cushing road. After the work was completed Freeholder S. P. T. Wilbur, to whom the bill was sent, refused to sanction it on the ground that the work was not according to contract and that it was unsatisfactory.

Halstead Compton and family, of West Front street, will sail this week for Nassau, West Indies, where they will spend the winter.

ALARM FROM "BOX 131" GETS BOROUGH FIREMEN GUESSING.

The borough fire alarm sounded a call from box 131 at about 11:30 yesterday morning, throwing the firemen in a quandary as to where the fire was. Hitched up and ready for a quick run, the firemen lost time at headquarters, for there is no box 131 and it was not for several minutes that someone shouted to them that the fire was on Pearl street, and they were able to respond. The box pulled was 141, at Pearl and Somerset streets, but the tapper at headquarters registered 103, 113 and 9, so that the firemen could do nothing but guess where the fire was. The trouble was with the wiring, and it was repaired before noon by linemen.

The fire was at the shop of Christian Anderson, a 70-year-old cabinet maker, who lives alone in the rear of Robert Woods' house on Pearl street, near Watchung avenue. Anderson was getting his breakfast at the stove in the shop when the woodwork caught fire. The old man threw a pail of water on the flames and ran for more water. When he returned the interior of the shack was a mass of flames and his whiskers were singed off as he attempted to fight the fire. The interior of the shop was badly gutted and all the wood carving tools and stock destroyed, with all the old man's personal property. The building was owned by John Giebelhouse and was not insured. Anderson, who has been a resident of this city for the past twenty years, and the fire leaves him absolutely penniless and homeless. A fund for his relief has been started and donations for the man will be received at this office.

Anti-Tuberculosis Crusade.

The New Jersey Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis is planning an active season, which will include the establishment of day camps for ambulant tuberculosis cases and santoria and hospitals for incipient and advanced cases. A comprehensive investigation of hygienic conditions in homes, factories, stores, workshops and schools, as well as public conveyances. Mayor Charles J. Fisk is one of the vice presidents of the association and Hugh F. Fox, Dr. William H. Murray and Dr. B. VanD. Hedges are among the directors.

LAWRENCE BROKE RECORD

Y.M.C.A. Athlete Established New State Association Figures in Orange Meet.

PLAINFIELDERS LOST BY POINT.

Lowering Records In Standing Broad Jump and Shot Put, Lawrence Won 18 Points—Final Score 32-31.

Russell Lawrence, of the Y. M. C. A. gym team, broke two State Y. M. C. A. records at the Dual meet between the local association and Orange held at Orange Saturday night, establishing new figures for the standing broad jump and the 12-pound shot put. His efforts, and he won eighteen points for his team, were insufficient to win for the local boys, however, and the Orange athletes were victorious by a single point, the final score being 32 to 31. Had "Jack" Payne been up to form in the shot put, the local boys would have won, but the local cop could not equal the 37 foot 3 inch put of Wood, the Orange athlete who won third place in the event.

Lawrence did 10 feet 4½ inches in the broad, three inches better than the State record held by B. Adams, of the Newark association. In the shot put, he succeeded in throwing the weight 46 feet 7½ inches, establishing a new State record over W. Rogers, of the Paterson association, who has a record of 42 feet 1 inch. The meet was closely contested throughout, and Plainfield's chances were good until it came to the shot put, where Orange landed four points to the local athletes' five. The potato race offered another chance for the locals to pull ahead, but the watch showed the better time to Cortier, though Plainfielders took second and third place. The summary of the events follows:

Fifteen yard dash. First heat won by Cortier, O.; Burgess, P., second. Second heat won by Douglass, P.; Brader, O., second. Third heat won by Wood, O.; Templin, P., second. Finals, Cortier, O., first; Douglass, P., second; Woods, O., third.

Standing broad jump. Lawrence, P., first, 10 ft. 4½ in., (State record); Banks, P., second, 9 ft. 5½ in.; Burgess, P., third, 9 ft. 3 in.

Twelve pound shot. Lawrence, P., first, 46 ft. 7½ in. (State record); Wood, O., 37 ft. 3¼ in.; Creed, O., third, 37 ft. 3 in.

Three standing broad jumps. Lawrence, P., first, 30 ft. 3 in.; Davis, O., second, 28 ft. 10 in.; Burgess, P., third, 27 ft. 9 in.

Running high jump. Wildneuer, O., first, 5 ft. 3 in.; Brown, O., second, 5 ft. 3 in.; Burgess, P., third, 5 ft. 2 in.

Fence vault. Wildneuer, O., first, 6 ft. 3 in.; Lawrence, P., second, 6 ft. 2 in.; Davis, O., third, 6 ft. 1 in.

220-yard potato race. Cortier, O., first, 54 sec.; Burgess, P., second, 55 sec.; Douglass, P., third, 1:14.

Lost Her Sunday Dinner.

Worshippers coming from Trinity Reformed and the First M. E. churches yesterday about noon detected the smell of burning meat and was later informed that a housekeeper in the Jackson building had placed her roast in the oven before going to church and that she did not return in time to save her Sunday dinner. Smoke was also seen coming from a window in the flat and someone was on the point of turning in an alarm of fire when the cause was discovered.

WISCONSIN PEARL HUNTING.

Digging Clams for the Valuable Gem Twenty Years Ago.

Twenty years ago a pearl craze started in Wisconsin. Every one dug clams, says Outing Magazine. Mills stopped and the water was drawn from the mill ponds that the people might get the mussels more easily. Previous to 1895, according to the government report, $300,000 worth of pearls were found in Wisconsin—Sugar river alone yielding $10,000 before becoming exhausted. At that time river pearls were not valued as highly as "orientals," but now they are eagerly bought by jewelers. Several years ago button factories were established at various points on the Mississippi river. Men collected clams and sold the shells to these factories to be made into pearl buttons. Some pearls were found and another craze soon started. Men flocked to the river from all walks of life. White men, red men, black men, brown men and women, all came, though after a month of sun, wind and river water coffee, racial characteristics were not conspicuous.

In the summer of 1902 it was said that 20,000 men were clamming on the Mississippi and its tributaries. In the spring of the next year the rush was even greater, but this did not last long. Owing to the overfishing of the previous season, the market was already overstocked and the price of shells had dropped so low that by July comparatively few boats were at work. Many enormous beds that were thought to be inexhaustible had given out, the buyers rejected so many (only about a quarter of those caught were salable, even at the latter part of the season) the river was almost deserted.

HOW TO WIN BATTLES.

Men Who Hit Are Determining Factor in War.

Other things being equal, good shooting is the determining factor in war. Poorly drilled and hastily organized bodies of men can give a good account of themselves if they know how to shoot and hit what they shoot at.

In our war for independence, says Army and Navy Life, the colonists were woodsmen. They carried and used their arms to supply their homes with food, and to protect them from the savage. As marksmen they vastly outclassed the British, and that more than anything else gave Washington the final victory.

Again, in our great civil war, mark the effect of a general knowledge of firearms. In the south were sporting people; they were fond of riding and hunting, shooting at target and at game entered into their sports and pastimes. The north was commercial.

Its men knew nothing of firearms, save the flintlocks of their grandfathers, objects of curiosity in their shops or homes, except in the far west, where the life of 1776 was still being lived. The result was that in the east the southern troops were generally victorious for a couple of years until the northern troops learned to shoot. What little success the north had was in the west, where they were little better than a standoff.

A Paying Crop.

F. W. Burbridge, M. A., of Dublin, in his opening address at the narcissus conference, held in 1896, said: "An acre of wheat or potatoes may be put down as worth from £20 to £50, according to locality, variety, etc., but an acre of choice daffodils or narcissuses may be worth anything from £50 to £500, or even more." The advisability of blending bulb-growing with the culture of flowering roots of all kinds is increasingly apparent, and thus the chance of success is widened. In addition, flower production may be regarded as a very natural aid to the enlargement of the scope of the bulb grower. There is an astonishing demand in large cities for the very commonest kinds of blossoms, and many a grower is adding substantially to his annual turnover and profits by the production of these ordinary flowers.—Dundee Advertiser.

Not a Welch One.

Rev. Mr. Freuder of Philadelphia, was invited to dine at the house of a friend whose wife went into her kitchen to give some final orders. Incidentally, she added to the servant: "We are to have a Jewish rabbi for dinner to-day." For a moment the maid surveyed her mistress in grim silence. Then she spoke with decision: "All I have to say is," she announced, "if you have a Jewish rabbi for dinner, you'll cook it yourself."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Taking Her Pick.

The following was told at a smoker recently, and it is not so bad, either. The narrator told of another little feed he once attended, where eight men were sent home in one hack; and the driver simply rang the doorbell and when a feminine voice called from the upper window: "Who is there?" the jehu replied: "Missus, will you be so kind as to come down and pick out your baby?"—Lippincott's.

Abstemiousness Pays.

The future is to the people who are strictly sober. The Japanese, officers and soldiers, fed on rice, and during the great war from which they issued victorious had only water to appease their thirst.—Henri Rochefort in L'Intransigeant.

VETERAN ACTOR IS DEAD

J. H. Stoddart, Famous Comedian, Passes Away in Eightieth Year.

HE HAD AN EVENTFUL CAREER.

For Many Years in Wallack's and Palmer's Stock Companies—Supported Jefferson.

James Henry Stoddart, the veteran actor, whose life forms one of the most interesting chapters in the history of the New York stage, died yesterday at his home in Sewaren. The son of an actor, he began his stage career at the bottom of the ladder and worked his way up until he became one of the best-known actors in this country. From his "general utility" days to the time when he gained recognition as a comedian, he was noted for the care he bestowed upon every character assigned to him.

Mr. Stoddart was born in Barnsley, Yorkshire, England, October 21, 1827. "My theatrical career," the actor wrote in an autobiagraphcial sketch, "commenced in Glasgow, Scotland, where my father was a member of the Theatre Royal for upward of twenty-five years, under the management of John Henry Alexander, one of the most eccentric men that ever lived. I was the second of five brothers, and we took it in turns to go with father to the theatre, carrying his carpet bag containing the properties he required for the night's performance. Mr. Alexander saw us and proposed that I and my brothers might go on the various pieces for pages, peasants, juvenile lords, young suffians, &c.; my father's salary was small, his family large, so he jumped at the proposition."

Mr. Stoddart's first appearance was at the Royal theatre, Aberdeen, Scotland, in November, 1854. He sailed for America in August, 1854, and in September of that year made his first appearance at Wallack's theatre, Broadway, and Broome street, in a small character in Brough's once popular farce called "A Phenomenon in a Smock Frock." He remained in Mr. Wallack's company, in a humble capacity, for two seasons. He was married October 28, 1855, to Mrs. Conover, (Matilda Phillips), a member of the same company.

When Laura Keene opened her new theatre, afterward the Olympic, on Broadway near Houston street, in 1856. Stoddart was a member of the company. He left afterward to fill other engagements, but returned in 1861 and remained there until Miss Keene withdrew from the management. The Olympic, in 1866, passed under the management of Leonard Wood and Mr. Stoddart was engaged as principal comedian. He supported Joseph Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle" and other plays. He also played with the elder Sothern, Stuart Robson, Charlotte Cushman and Edwin Booth. In the part of Moneypenny, in "The Long Strike," he attracted the attention of Lester Wallack, who engaged him for his company.

He remained with Wallack for eleven years, playing many important characters. Then he made a brief starring tour in "The Long Strike," and on his return joined the company of A. M. Palmer at the Union Square theatre. Mr. Stoddart remained with Mr. Palmer twenty years. He was with that manager during all the years he controlled the Union Square and Madison Square theatres, and was with the traveling stock company until it disbanded. He then appeared in "The Sporting Duchess," and later starred for several seasons in "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush" under the management of the late Kirke La Shelle.

The funeral services will be held from his late residence, Sewaren, tomorrow at 2 p. m.

JAMES F. PANGBORN DEAD.

Had Been a Resident of Plainfield All His Life.

James F. Pangborn, a life-long resident of the city, died yesterday afternoon at his home on East Seventh street. He had been ailing for many years with an affection of the lower limbs but only recently had been seriously ill.

Mr. Pangborn was seventy-one years old and was a sash and blind maker by trade. He entered the employ of the one time firm of Spicer & Hubbard when a young man and for many years was foreman of its factory at Third street and Madison avenue. He had never been identified with city or lodge affairs but was a baseball enthusiast and helped to support whatever team Plainfield put in the field. He is survived by a wife, one daughter, Mrs. Walter H. Dorlon, and two sons, Lloyd and Frederick Pangborn, all of this city.

The funeral will be held at his late home tomorrow night at 8 o'clock and interment will be at the convenience of the family.

GARDNERS APPEAR AGAIN

This Time Crippled Son in the Family Faces Charge in City Court.

WRECKED HIS MOTHER'S HOME.

Demolished Furniture and Crockery and Struck His Parent Before Policeman Arrived.

For the first time in many months, this morning's session of the city court had a member of the notorious Gardner family on the list of prisoners. This time it was David Gardner, a twenty-two-year-old son, who contracted an awful jag yesterday afternoon and tried to demolish the home of his mother on East Third street opposite Church. Though he is partially paralyzed on one side he succeeded to the extent of wrecking every stick of furniture, smashing the crockery and disfiguring his mother's face before Patrolman Nolan arrived and caged up the tornado.

The parent changed her name by getting a new husband since she last appeared in court and is now Mrs. Benjamin Raven. She told the officer that she would press a charge against the son but she failed to appear when his case was called. Nolan was not in a position to testify positively as to what he had done and principally for that reason the prisoner was paroled in the custody of Chief Kiely.

The Gardner family came to Plainfield from Easton some years ago and almost from the moment of their entrance they began making trouble for the police. Beside the parents there were a daughter and three sons and all appeared before Judge Runyon at regular intervals with the exception of the father. He dropped dead one morning on Front street as he was waiting to hear what sentence had been passed on one of the boys, arrested the day before on a charge of striking his mother.

Two of the sons, Lewis and James, were finally arrested for setting fire to the laundry plant on East Fourth street and were sent to the Rahway reformatory. James, the younger of the two, was released on probation last summer and hied himself to Easton to visit friends. While there he stole a horse and was given seven years in the State prison. David and his mother had also been living in Easton again but returned to Plainfield three months ago and today was the first the court saw of them since they came back.

STATE PRISON TERMS FOR WEAPON CARRIERS

The edict went forth from Judge Runyon in the city court this morning that hereafter prisoners brought before him on charges of carrying concealed weapons would be in line to get State prison sentences. The warning from the bench was brought about by the arrest of Nicola Ceuri, an Italian laborer, who was taken to headquarters yesterday on a charge of drunkenness and upon whom was found a razor.

Judge Runyon informed the prisoner and a large crowd of his countrymen who were present that other cities in the State had taken up a crusade against the carrying of knives, razors and pistols and that Plainfield was going to fall in line. In Elizabeth, he said, a term in the penitentiary is one of the remedies adopted and he would recommend the same thing here.

Ceuri offered in explanation a statement that he had been given the razor by a friend to have it repaired. His story was corroborated by Salve Velarde, the local contractor, and also by the handle of the weapon, which was broken. For this reason, the magistrate allowed the prisoner to go on suspension of sentence but with the admonition that he is to warn all of his friends of what will happen if they are caught carrying weapons. Contractor Velarde, who employs large gangs of Italians, was also instructed to tell his men the same thing.

"Personal Sights on River Nile."

"Personal Sights Along the River Nile," will be the subject of an interesting illustrated lecture to be given at the Y. M. C. A. Friday night, December 20, by Charles W. McCutchen, for the benefit of the building fund of Faith chapel. Mr. McCutchen has more than 100 superb views taken by himself on his trip along the wonderful Nile and his lecture cannot fail to interest. Arrangements have been made whereby the teachers of the city and North Plainfield public schools will attend. There is a very large sale of tickets. They can be had at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

NEW LIFE FOR CONTRACT

Street Pave Work Will Be Finished May 1 Next by City Fathers Consent.

BOND ISSUE IS RESCINDED.

Firm Gets Back Check Although Corporation Counsel Says Its Legal Argument Is Unsound.

After considerable effort a quorum was secured for the adjourned meeting if the Common Council, last night, although not a single member appeared to know why such a meeting was necessary. In the absence of City Clerk J. T. MacMurray, George B. Wean, acting in that capacity, telephoned several members and succeeded in getting President Daniel, Councilmen Mellick, Frank Randolph, Ginna, Tolles and Montgomery to the council chamber. Comparatively little business could be transacted and before the meeting adjourned it was decided to hold another session on Monday night, December 23, to pay bills and close up the year's business.

Upon the advice of Corporation Counsel Marsh, who stated that he believed the firm to be acting in good faith, although in error, the request of A. B. Leach & Co., of New York, for the return of its certified check of $3,400 was granted. The firm's bid on the city's $68,000 issue of 4 per cent. sewer bonds was accepted, but later the firm refused the issue on the plea that it had not been advertised the full time. This, Mr. Marsh declared, was not necessary, but it was decided not to hold the firm to its agreement.

Contractor C. M. Meeker, on request, was granted an extension of time to April 30 in which to complete the brick pavement work now under contract, and an extension of time to April 15 in which to complete the macadamizing of Arlington place. In his communication Mr. Meeker stated that the Public Service Corporation had caused him great delay in the brick pavement work.

It having been decided by the street committee not to do anything this year in regard to the Plainfield avenue storm sewer proposition, Mr. Ginna, the chairman, offered a resolution which was adopted, returning all bids for that work and another one authorizing the return of C. M. Meeker's certified check for $200, which has been held by the committee since he submitted a bid two or three months ago. The proposition to build the sewer was given up because of the high price of material.

The city treasurer and tax collector were authorized to execute releases in the case of property at 1421 to 1475 East Front street, owned by Joseph Bird, which was sold under the Martin Act for 1903 taxes, the owner having decided to redeem the same. The amount involved is $82.06, being taxes and interest.

The petition of N. Peterson for permission to remove a farm building, 16x22 feet from Evona avenue, a distance of 500 feet to West Third street, was referred to the street and sewer committee, as was also the petition of Charles A. Sturtevant and others asking for a sanitary sewer in Lake street.

The bond of Tax Collector W. R. Townsend, which was sent to Elizabeth to be recorded in the office of the county registrar of deeds, was reported returned and was ordered filed. The Public Service Corporation reported the erection of one electric light on West Eighth street, as ordered.

The customary resolution providing for the laying of sidewalks where property owners failed to do the work, was offered by Chairman Ginna, of the street committee, and adopted. The city will do the work and charge it up to the property. In the absence of every member of the auditing committee, President Daniel appointed Councilman Mellick, Montgomery and Frank Randolph a committee to audit the three bills presented.

Will Talk About Social Conditions.

The Men's Club of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church will meet tonight and listen to an address by Lawrence Veiller, formerly Deputy Tenement House Commissioner of New York and lately a director of the Department for the Improvement of Social Conditions of the Charity Organization Society, who will tell of the work of his department. All men of the church are invited. Refreshments will be served.

Meeting for the Blind Postponed.

The mass meeting which was scheduled to be held in Newark Thursday night in the interest of the blind people of the State and for the purpose of forming an association, has been postponed until after the holidays. Due notice of the new date will be published in advance. Percy Cannon is among those from this city who are interested in the movement.

JURIES CAN'T BE BEATEN

Representative Local Men on Panel Drawn by Sheriff Lawrence.

TO SERVE AS PETIT JURORS.

G. H. Goddard, F. W. Butler, Samuel Merwin and H. V. Borden are Among the Number.

The high standing of the men being drawn by Sheriff Lawrence in the Union County Court for service on the petit juries has awakened unusual interest in court circles. One jury was drawn yesterday for two weeks' service this month and this morning another jury was drawn for service the first two weeks in January. The Plainfield members selected are nearly all representative citizens and will insure, it is believed, an impartial rendering of verdicts in cases that come before them.

The members from this city who will serve the first two weeks in January are as follows: Samuel Merwin, William C. Startup, William B. Tyler, George H. Goddard, Leander N. Lovell, John G. Bicknell, Frederick W. Butler, Henry B. Newhall, R. Henry Depew, John Doull Miller, Alfred F. Streuli, Amos Andrews and Clarence Goss.

The Plainfield members chosen yesterday for two weeks' service are as follows: Eugene M. Cave, Harry V. Borden, Joseph C. Allen, Herbert Stover, Gustave Hoffman, J. V. F. Dilts, Clarence E. Bond, Theodore J. Pruden, David C. Smalley, Ira L. LaRue and Theodore J. Runyon.

UNION'S POLITICIANS TO GATHER AT FEAST

All the big and little fry among Union county's political folk will attend a dinner to be given at John Bender's hotel in Lorraine tomorrow night. Both Plainfield and Elizabeth will be represented by large delegations of those who go to make up the political powers that be.

It is probable that County Chairman Frank H. Smith will act as toastmaster although this has not been decided upon as yet. The feast is not confined to one party for Republicans and Democrats alike will join in the affair. It is said that covers will be set for 200 people. The repast will be one of Bender's famous German meals and the whole affair is being arranged on an elaborate scale.

The dinner will take place at 7:30. During and following the eight courses, professional entertainment will help enliven the occasion.

PLAINFIELDER EDITS "THE AMERICAN NATION"

In the authorship of the new work in twenty-seven volumes called "The American Nation: a History," just published by Harper & Brothers, a former Plainfield boy and graduate of the high school, William Archibald Dunning, Ph. D., LL. D., now professor of history and political philosophy in Columbia University, is assigned the leading place. The work is the result of several years' labor of trained historical scholars, each of whom has made a life-study of the period with which he deals.

Prof. Dunning is the author of the volume dealing with the reconstruction period covering the years from 1865 to 1877, and in his treatment of the matter he displays his usual impartial judgment and a clear grasp and a scholarly exposition of the subject under consideration.

PASTOR OF ITALIAN MISSION WILL ADDRESS ENDEAVORERS

The bi-monthly meeting of the Plainfield Christian Endeavor Union will be held Thursday night, January 16, at Trinity Reformed church. There will be a discussion of the work of the missionary committees of the union led by Frank Stewart, chairman of the general committee.

Rev. Antonio Arrighi, pastor of the Italian Missioin of New York, will talk on "Practical Missionary Work Among the Italians." Supper will be served in the lecture room at 6:30 o'clock by the young women of Trinity Reformed church. Th union is also planning for a watch-night service New Year's Eve to be held in one of the local churches.

Wed-el-Ward To Lecture Again.

Wad-el-Ward will give a stereopticon lecture on the Holy Land at the First Baptist church Sunday evening, under the auspices of the Young People's Society.

LINGUIST ON THE BIBLE

A Levite of the Tribe of Ezra Says Translations Have Distorted Meanings.

HE QUOTES ORIGINAL ARABIC.

Recites the Lord's Prayer in His Own Tongue at First Baptist Church Men's Meeting.

Wad-el-Ward, a Levite, of the tribe of Ezra, born at Mount Zion, Palestine, spoke before the Men's Club of the First Baptist church, last night, on the interpretation of the Scriptures in the light of the manners and customs of the people of Palestine. A native of Palestine, Wad-el-Ward, literally "Rose of the Dale," or Mr. Rosedale, is an educated student of the Bible and Bible history, speaking fourteen languages, including Arabic, Hebrew and English. With him at the church last night was his daughter, and the two sang several songs in German, Hebrew and Arabic. The selections won enthusiastic applause from the thirty-five members of the club present.

The speaker had much to say on interpretations of the Bible, claiming that in several cases the translations were inaccurate. He said that according to the original Arabic, the Lord's prayer should read as follows:

"Our Father, Who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy name, that Thy kingdom may come on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us day by day our sufficient wants, and forgive us our sins as we ought also to forgive those who sin against us. Lead us out of temptation, delivering us from evil, for Thou hast the kingdom, the power and the glory for ever and ever. Amen." This version, giving the true meaning of the prayer, has been distorted by incorrect translation, he says.

The women of Palestine, according to the speaker, are on no such high rank with the men. The word "woman" in Arabic means "bitterness," or "soul-less one," and no women are allowed to testify in the Eastern courts. In speaking about Our Lord's command to the disciples to go unto all nations preaching, "saluting no man by the way," Wad-el-Ward explained the phrase by saying that Eastern custom demanded a salutation of kisses and embracing, with reciprocal inquiries after each member of the family and salutations for each, so that it the disciples had waited to exchange these salutations on every occasion much valuable time would have been lost. The formal salutation between two men of the East, occasioning dismounting from their horses, greetings for each member of both families, and breaking of bread if the house of either be near, often takes over an hour.

The burial customs of the East were explained at length. There is an elaborate rite of burial, including seven days mourning in sackcloth and ashes. The people believe that at the grave on the eighth day there is a struggle between the saints and the devil for the possession of the departed soul, and the family are always at the grave to offer prayer for the defeat of the devil. Wad-el-Ward outlined the burial customs in explanation of the retort of Christ to the man who besought Him to first let him go and bury his father, preventing delay by the long rite.

The lecturer appeared in native Eastern costume, and was introduced by T. S. Armstrong, vice-president of the club. He explained the uses of the robe of his costume as bed and even table cloth, saying that the command "Take up thy bed and walk" did not refer to a bed as we think of it, or even to a mattress, but merely meant to arise and wrap his cloak about him.

In connection with the talk there was a business meeting of the club, President J. Hervey Buchanan being in the chair. He outlined a plan for rousing interest in the organization and bringing in new members.

Mr. Macfadden's Lecture.

Bernard Macfadden, who is acknowledged to be the "Apostle of Physical Culture," will lecture Wednesday evening, December 11, at the Casino on "Physical Culture—What It Is—What It Will Do For You." This lecture, according to information received, will be a comprehensive and plain talk upon physical culture methods and their bearing to every-day life.

Charity Organization Annual.

The annual meeting of the Charity Organization Society will be held in the auditorium of the Plainfield High School Thursday night at 8 o'clock. There will be addresses by Isaac C. Ogden and W. H. Aborn, of Orange, who have been making an exhaustive study of charity enterprise.

SUES A SOCIETY WOMAN

Berlin Attorney Seeks Settlement from Mrs. Nina Weir-Lewis.

HAS HER HOME ATTACHED.

Action Brought to Recover Cash Loan and Money Alleged to Be Due for Services.

James H. Vickery, of Berlin, Germany, through Timothy H. Kelly, of Elizabeth, acting as his attorney, has caused a writ of attachment to be issued in the Somerset county court on property located on Rockview avenue, North Plainfield, owned by Mrs. Nina Weir-Lewis, who was formerly prominent in local society.

The existence of the attachment was learned through the filing of an affidavit in the opce of the county clerk at Somerville by Craig A. Marsh accompanied Mrs. Weir-Lewis and her daughters on their first trip abroad in the summer of 1902; that they visited her since then and that the handsome residence which had been attached is worth $18,000, but that he holds a mortgage of $6,000 on it as trustee under the will of Frederick P. Chase.

In Mr. Kelly's affidavit he states that Mrs. Weir-Lewis owes Mr. Vickery the sum of $3,676.07 for cash loaned and professional services rendered as attorney at law to her at various times from May, 1906, to November of the same year, that she is not now a resident of this State having gone beyond the reach of her creditors. On October 30, Sheriff Edward E. Cooper attached the property of Mrs. Weir-Lewis on Rockview avenue.

In the affidavit filed by Mr. Marsh he states further that when Mrs. Weir-Lewis left Berlin for Paris and London last year, it was in broad daylight; that all of her friends and acquaintances were fully aware of her intended departure a month before she left; that Mr. Vickery afterward visited Mrs. Weir-Lewis at Dresden and returned to Berlin with Ernest D. Britton, said to be the fiance of one of Mrs. Weir-Lewis' daughters.

HUSBAND DESTROYS ALL OF WIFE'S CLOTHING

Mrs. James Saunders, colored, who lives on Plainfield avenue near Fourth street, presented herself before Judge Runyon in the city court this morning, carrying enough clothes in her arms to fill a basket. She said she wished to prefer a charge against her husband, and spreading the garments on a table she showed where he had cut and slashed them until they were nothing but rags. All her best gowns, shirtwaists and underskirts were included in the lot and she informed the magistrate that he had left her only the clothes she had on when he committed the malicious act. She works as a domestic, she said, and the cutting was accomplished some time yesterday while she was away from home.

A warrant was made out for Saunders and the police will apprehend him. He is a hodcarrier and is employed by a North Plainfield contractor. Mrs. Saunders could offer no explanation for his destructiveness other than he had become angered at her for something and did it in a spirit of revenge. When asked how she knew it was her husband that had committed the act she said he had admitted doing it.

RECKLESS DRIVER FINED.

Scattered Passengers at Trolley Stand and Knocked Down Man.

Christopher Mobus, a young man employed by a local liveryman, was arraigned in the city court, this morning, charged with reckless driving on Watchung avenue at 11 o'clock last night. He pleaded not guilty but was convicted and fined $5.

Terminal Superintendent Smith, of the Public Service Corporation, testified against Mobus and informed the court that he had driven at a fast pace down Watchung avenue at the trolley stand as the cars were transferring passengers, scattering them in every direction. His horse struck an old man who was crossing to the sidewalk and threw his some distance. He was badly shaken up but after getting fixed up at a drug store he went home without giving his name.

PLANS FOR NEW COUNTY

Mayor N. B. Smalley to Call Meeting of Effected Taxpayers.

FEELS MUCH ENCOURAGED.

The Father of a Novel Scheme Outlines His Plan of Campaign—Plainfield to Be the Centre.

Mayor Newton B. Smalley, of North Plainfield, preparing to call a meeting of interested citizens to promote the new county scheme which he launched at the session of the Board of Trade on Thursday night. An invitation will be extended to residents of all the communities adjacent to Plainfield included in the proposition, which has for its object the formation of a new county with Plainfield as its centre, to be present.

In discussing his plans this morning, Mayor Smalley said: "You would be surprised were I to tell you the names of representative men who have approved of the new county idea. It is a great mistake to believe that the plan is an impossible one. When we get the proper sort of organization, we can demand action on the part of the Legislature and can keep eternally at it until we win.

"I conferred with a number of prominent men, not only in Plainfield but in other parts nearby, last night and I feel much encouraged. In a day or two I intend to hold an informal conference with a few men and will then be in a position to issue a call for a meeting. What is intended is the organization of an association in which will be represented North Plainfield, Plainfield, South Plainfield, Dunellen, New Market, Watchung, Fanwood and Scotch Plains, the communities to be included in the new county.

"The only objection I have heard so far," continued the mayor, "comes from some practical politicians. Of course I can understand that from their standpoint, such a scheme would be unwise, but I say that from a business and a taxpayer's standpoint it would be the best thing that ever happened. As I have said before, these communities located at the junction of Union, Somerset and Middlesex counties are continually getting less than their share. They pay a good share of the county taxes and get very small returns. Instead of North Plainfield having to go to Somerville for what it due it, Plainfield having to go to Elizabeth, and Dunellen having to go to New Brunswick, they would get it right here at home. The new county would have a population of over 30,000 to start with but numbers don't show strength—its wealth would be greater than some counties now in existence which are much larger. With a new county the taxpayers' money would be spent right at home."

The mayor said that the proposed new county would have a radius of five miles with Plainfield as the centre.

JEWELED BADGE FOR PAST SUPREME CHIEF.

A delegation of members of Freedom Castle, No. 42, Knights of the Golden Ealge, will attend a special meeting of Mercer Castle, No. 23, at Trenton, Thursday evening, at which time the Past Supreme Chief's badge and jewel will be presented to Past Supreme Chief George J. Robertson, of New Jersey Castle, No. 4, of Mount Holly. The presentation committee will consist of G. E. S. G. John M. Shapell, of Philadelphia; P. G. C. J. Hervey Buchanan, of the local lodge, and P. G. C. William B. Kirby, of the Bridgeton lodge, editor of the Bridgeton Evening News. After the meeting and the presentation, a complimentary banquet will be tendered to Past Supreme Chief Robertson.

Aside from the local lodgemen, delegates from any of the State lodges will be present at the presentation ceremony.

Judge Caught Them In a Lie.

Richard Walsh and Daniel Hughes, two New York men, were arrested by Patrolman Saffron, yesterday, for selling soap without a license. They spent the night in cells and might have got off this morning but for an attempt to lie to Judge Runyon. The magistrate was too sharp for them and tripped both up in a tale about "taking orders." Each was fined $3 or ten days.

Interscholastic Basketball Begins.

NEWS IN THE SUBURBS

SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

When the carpenters went to work early yesterday morning on the Catholic church they found their tools, valued at $70, had all been stolen. The tool-house had been broken open with a heavy anchor iron. Work was suspended until new tools could be purchased from Plainfield. No clue to the thieves has so far been discovered but it is generally thought to be the work of tramps who had come in by way of the railroad, probably from Newark or Jersey City, as several such men were noticed hanging around the new building on Sunday evening.

The monthly business meeting of the Young Peoples' Social Club will be held Thursday at the home of Mrs. G. Smith, at which arrangements for Christmas festivities will be discussed.

Alfred Springer, of Lake Side avenue, went out in the grey of yesterday morning and after a two hours' tramp he was rewarded with four rabbits which fell to his gun.

Bert Trimmer, of Plainfield avenue, sold his first pig to Oscar Thorne yesterday. It tipped the scales at two hundred and forty pounds.

Joel Manning, of Plainfield avenue, has commenced the removal of his furniture to his new residence on West Front street, Plainfield.

WESTFIELD.

The building committee of the Zion Methodist church expects to commence work on the new church, on Osborne avenue, this week. The building is to be of concrete.

Property owners in Westfield are complaining over the amount of sidewalk work that is uncompleted, there being nearly half a mile of sidewalk torn up in town.

The Holland Trio will give a musicale at the Westfield Congregational church Tuesday night, December 17, under the auspices of the Men's Club.

Court Provident, Independent Order of Foresters, of Westfield, elected officers at the meeting held at Masonic Hall last night.

STIRLING.

The meeting of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor was held Sunday night in the Presbyterian church. It was conducted by John Ananson. The subject was "Lessons from an Old Love Story."

The business meeting and social of the Junior Christian Endeavor of this place will be held tomorrow night at 7 o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Thomas, of Chestnut street.

Raymond Crotzley, of Avon avenue, Newark, who had been spending a few days here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Crotzley, of Elm street, returned to his home yesterday.

The meeting of the Junior Christian Endeavor Society was held Sunday afternoon in the Presbyterian church. It was conducted by Miss Rotha Thomas.

Elias Shabander, of College Point, Long Island, who had been on a few days' visit to Mrs. M. Bahooshian, of Elm street, left here Sunday.

Hanna Bahooshian, of Elm street, who had been spending a few days with friends in Paterson, returned home Sunday night.

Misses Anna and Elizabeth Staub, of Paterson, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Thelvon, of Chestnut street, Sunday.

Homer G. House, of Madison, was entertained here Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. Peter Nelson and family, of Elm street.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

BASEBALL.

This is the week that the big baseball magnates put their heads together and talk over the business end of the national game. It is probable that a number of important deals for players will be made, particularly at the National League meeting. McGraw's New York team, judging from rumors that are prevalent, will come in for a complete overhauling, which will result in the departure of several former heroes. The showing of the team this year—fourth place—served to stir up McGraw and his employers to the point of realizing that some radical changes were necessary, else the games at the Polo Grounds would not retain their former popularity. The additional fact that the New York Americans' manager, Clark Griffith, after a disastrous campaign pulled off two deals by which he brought Jake Stahl, Glade, Niles and Hemphill to New York acted as a further inducement to McGraw to put on his hustling clothes. At the American League meeting it is possible that a resolution will be passed changing the headquarters and all future meetings of the league to New York. By going to Chicago the American League men feel that they are allowing the National League's meeting to monopolize the space in all of the Eastern newspapers. As a matter of good business policy the American League's headquarters should have been established in this city some time ago. Broadway should be equally divided between Presidents Pulliam and Johnson.

GOLF.

Notwithstanding the snow on the links some lovers of golf engaged in the sport Saturday. It was decided to postpone the competition for a beefsteak dinner, on the Forest Hill course, until the ground shall be clear. At Baltusrol the greens had been swept, and a score of players, attracted by the mild atmosphere and bright sunshine, made the round of the links.

Next week there will be a great match across the water between Arnaud Massey, the Frenchman, and James Braid, the famous Scotch player. Massey won the championship of Great Britain this year, and also defeated Braid and Vardon in France. Braid has been champion of Great Britain, and friends who believe that he can beat the Frenchman have made up a purse for the two men to play for on December 17.

Golf, Illustrated, the English publication, is looking forward to the next amateur championship in England and in its last issue speculated as to the chances of young Jerome D. Travers, should he go over to take part in it. It said that some Americans rank Travers above Travis, and added: "But he hasn't Travis' wonderful temperament." That cool and taciturn spirit of Travis made a deep impression on the English in 1904, and certainly his mental equipment did as much as his skill to win him the championship of Great Britain. Travers is probably the best amateur golfer in the world, but, considering his youth, it would be marvelous if he could win from the cracks of England and Scotland, with a hostile gallery back of him. He is not seasoned for such a test. And yet he would have a chance if only Walter Travis could go over to coach him.

Fred Herreshoff is probably the longest amateur driver in the country, but his 290-yard drives seem like mid-iron shots when one reads of the work of Otto Hackbarth, a young German professional of Little Rock, Ark. He learned the game as a caddie, and, according to McLeod, the Midlothian "pro," he drove 350 yards in a game with the latter. McLeod is willing to bet that Hackbarth can out-drive any man in the world.

Seymour G. Dunn, the Wykogyl "pro," who is giving "Golf" a series of articles on driving, teaches the Vardon overlapping grip. It is a notable fact that Vardon, Taylor and Braid, who have held the championship of Great Britain for almost a dozen years, play with the over-lapping grip.

FOOTBALL.

They are still discussing at Cambridge the recent campaign of the Harvard football eleven and some of the bigwigs in Crimson athletics say that in future so-called "near victories" should not be tolerated. But these same persons have no radical suggestions to make looking to an improvement in the playing of the game. That the system of coaching at Harvard has been all wrong for some time past there seems to be little doubt. Just why the head coach should be a man who never played football on his varsity eleven but devoted the greater part of his time to golf and court tennis is a problem that few can solve. At Yale and Princeton there is always a wealth of high-class coaching material, with the result that fine football elevens are turned out from year to year. But Harvard apparently lacks such competent advisers.

In view of this fact therefore outsiders cannot understand why Harvard, with a professional rowing coach, does not reach out for a paid football coach, even though he does not happen to be a graduate of the Cambridge institution. There are some competent coaches in charge of prominent elevens in various parts of the country who know the game thoroughly and can impart this knowledge to their pupils. Harvard, say several outsiders, might engage one of these men and then hold him strictly accountable. But a suggestion of this kind, let it be said, would never appeal to aristocratic Beacon Street.

AMUSEMENTS.

Proctor's Theatre, Elizabeth.

Beginning with Monday afternoon, December 9, and continuing daily for the balance of the week, both matinee and evening, Proctor's Elizabeth theatre will present to its patrons the best vaudeville bill so far offered this season. The one special feature will be Miss Ruth Allen and company, presenting Charles Kenyon's comedy hit, "We Need the Money." Others on the bill are: Fred Primrose, character monologist; The Majestic Trio, funny colored comedians; Dallando, the clay modeller; Norton and Russell, presenting a new and novel character change act; the Bros. Sheck present a remarkably strong bill with their herculean acrobatic feats. The extra feature will be The Americus Comedy 4, the foremost comedy quartette, the best of their kind in the business. For the week of December 16, the special attraction will be Konorah, the sensational man of mystery, in the most remarkable exhibition ever presented here. Brotherhood and Barlow Company; the American Banjo 4; Lee Tung Foo, the famous Chinese baritone; the Josselin Trio, sensational aerists; and the added attraction is Hoey and Lea, vaudeville's foremost Hebrew comedians. As usual, the motion pictures are of the very best and take the most laughable subjects that are now being presented. Every Wednesday night will be the professional try-out night and every Friday will be amateur night.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, conducted a meeting with his class in the church parlors yesterday afternoon.

The Junior Epworth League of the First M. E. church will meet in Vincent chapel Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The pastor, Rev. A. C. McCrea, will be in charge.

The Young People's Association of the First Baptist church will have charge of the mid-week prayer service at the church tomorrow night. There will be special music.

The annual meeting of those interested in children will be held at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church tomorrow night. W. D. Murray will speak on "Parents' Problems."

Interested in real estate? If so, call on M. F. Gano, of North avenue. His list of properties for sale and lease is always attractive.

Toytown---the city of good cheer ---the abiding place of Old St. Nick. What a rollicking, frolicking happy place; and how the little folks enjoy it. We have gone to great ends this season to make this the best plaything show ever seen in Newark, and if the comments we hear may be taken as criterion, we have succeeded admirably.

Santa Claus Is Here

This genial Old Saint is holding court each day---listening to the tales of the little tots and finding out what they want for Christmas. Bring the youngsters in tomorrow to meet him; let him point out to them interesting spots of Toytown. He has pretty presents for children who come in before noon accompanied by an adult.

Santa Claus's Airship.

The good ship "Dasher" with jolly old St. Nicholas in command, makes daily journeys from the North Pole to our Toy Store and back, keeping us supplied with the best kinds of playthings for little boys and girls—and some of these toys he gives away to the little visitors to the store.

And, now, you little folks who have been wondering where Santa Claus went over night, may as well be told that when he closes up his shop here on the Second Floor, he takes his empty bag, goes up to the roof, gets in his airship, and sails away off home, refills his bag with toys and comes back again in the morning.

Yes, it is a big trip, but the airship goes fast, you know.

HAHNE & CO.'S PURITY CANDIES FOR CHRISTMAS.

Don't risk feeding trashy candies to your own children or to anybody else's.

It is an all too common crime.

See to it that the candies you buy are pure and are made in cleanly quarters.

In our Candy Kitchen on the Fourth Floor we make the great quantities of candies we sell. Here near the doof, in a big, clean room, flooded with sunlight, free from every objectionable feature—the antithesis of the filthy places in which is made so much of the candy sold to children about town.

If people knew where and how most candies are made they would surely insist that their children steer clear of the shops that sell them.

Sunday-schools in particular are advised to avoid the worse than cheap stuff that they are so frequently tempted to buy because of the low price.

THESE FOR YOUNG MOTHERS.

Dolls are here in so many kinds that we have not endeavored to begin to describe them. This is unquestionably the State's greatest doll show.

All thru the year we maintain a complete stock of dolls so that when Christmas comes we are better equipped for satisfying every demand that may be made upon us.

Dolls of every sort—blondes and brunettes; large and small; china bodies, and kid bodies, and other bodies; undressed and dressed dolls; dolls that go to sleep when you wish them; dolls that cry; dolls that talk; dolls of every nationality, at prices ranging from 5c to $50.

Doll Clothes—everything that dollie can wear—dresses, hats, stockings, shoes, undergarments, including corsets, gloves, parasols, umbrellas, overshoes, raincoats, automobile apparel—even to the goggles; all are here at least prices.

ADJOURNS GLAZIER CASE

Vice Chancellor after Hearing Witnesses Continues Injunction Proceedings 3 Weeks.

TESTIMONY TAKEN IS DAMAGING

Complaints Show that Fat Factory Stench Made People Ill and Affected Property Sales.

While there was a wide difference of opinion as to days and dates when the odor from Theodore Glazier's fat rendering factory at Alton was considered a nuisance, the witnesses called by the complainant in the action brought against Mr. Glazier before Vice-Chancellor Edwin R. Walker in the Common Council rooms, yesterday, were agreed in their opinion that it was a nuisance and should be abolished.

The hearing was resumed at 2 o'clock and from that hour until 5 o'clock a number of witnesses testified for the complainants, Miles Reusch and others, who are seeking to make permanent the temporary injunction restraining Mr. Glazier from carrying on his business.

Among the first witnesses called at the afternoon session was Frank Schuck, of Vine street, who had occasion to visit in the vicinity of Alton. He testified as to the unbearable stench, as he described it, that came from the factory, although he could not give exact dates.

An important witness was F. M. Masker, who lived at Alton for six years, and afterward sold his property to C. F. Hass, the present owner. He told how he was obliged to close the windows at his home to keep out the foul smell and how at times when he was about the yard he could scarcely get his breath. The odor had also affected his wife, he said, to such an extent that he was obliged to send her away for the summer. He also stated that about two years ago Mr. Glazier promised at a meeting of the Fanwood Board of Health that he would clean up his place and remove his factory within a few months. The cleaning up process, the witness said, caused even a worse odor than before.

He was questioned as whether he knew the factory existed at Alton when he purchased the property. He declared that he did not, whereupon Vice-Chancellor Walker said, "You were like your successor, the present owner of the property, who likewise stated that when he purchased the property he did not know of the alleged nuisance."

Judge Newcorn, of counsel for the defendant, then attempted to prove that the witness had instigated every complaint and action against Mr. Glazier; was standing a portion of the expense of the present suit and that he had even gone so far as to persuade a servant girl in his employ to run out-of-doors and shout when Mr. Glazier's wagon was passing the house.

All of these allegations Mr. Masker denied emphatically. He said that the stench was so bad at times that it "gagged" him. Like a majority of the witnesses for the complainants he distinctly remembered August 23 last, when between 8 and 9 o'clock at night the odor from the factory seemed to be worse than usual. He also testified that on March 26, 1907, he visited Mr. Glazier's place and saw at least seventy-five dead animals there in all sorts of condition. He had a camera with him, but it would not work, it being his intention to take some pictures.

Further testimony substantiating the claim of the complainants was furnished by Mrs. John Witterson, whose late husband purchased the Darby farm of 246 acres at Alton, and who lived there from last February until June. She described the odor as being a "nasty smell," and at times unbearable. For a long time she said she did not know what caused it, but learned about the source of it later. When cross examined by Judge Newcorn it was learned that she made an affidavit for the latter in which she stated that she was never inconvenienced or made ill by the smell from the factory, but she explained that she made this affidavit before she discovered the cause of the odor. Mr. Codington, of counsel for the complainants, then attempted to prove that Mrs. Witterson had told Judge Newcorn that she had detected the odor, but did not know what it was, and that this fact did not appear in the affidavit. Further questioning showed that it was some one else beside Judge Newcorn who took the affidavit.

The witness added to her testimony by saying that the Board of Health of Plainfield would not permit her to pasture her cows on a certain part of her land near Mr. Glazier's factory because of the liquid from the tanks which was allowed to run over the property. In one instance she said this liquid killed a tree.

Van Fleet Ryno, a young man at one time employed as janitor of the school at Alton was not an interesting witness. He said that he simply cared for the school and had only detected the alleged odor once and didn't remember the date. Mrs. Hester Ryno, who for a time lived on the Frazee Lee farm, only detected the odor once and then it was necessary to close the windows at the home of Mr. Reusch where she was helping him to pick strawberries.

The court had considerable difficulty in examining Julius Tietz, a young German, who resides at Alton. In answer to questions he said that he lived with his father and when asked where his father resided informed the court that it was "next to the saloon." In an amusing way he tried to describe the odor prevalent in the vicinity of his home and repeatedly said that it "was very heavy and terrible and couldn't stand it long." When Judge Newcorn asked him if he knew what atmospheric condition was, he replied: "That stink takes it all."

D. Foster Updike, a real estate broker, told how he visited Alton in company with Peter Neuman and J. D. Loizeaux for the purpose of selling either one the Darby farms, but when they detected the odor in the vicinity they could not be induced to buy. This testimony was followed by that of Mr. Neuman, who described the trip to Alton in March last and again in the following July. Both times he noticed the stench coming as he said from Mr. Glazier's factory. On one of his visits he saw between fifty and sixty dead animals at the Glazier place.

This concluded the testimony for the day and Vice-Chancellor Walker announced after a conference with counsel that an adjournment would be taken until Monday morning, December 30, at 10 o'clock. There are yet a number of witnesses to be called by the complainants, while the defendant's side of the story remains to be heard.

LIMITS PRESIDENT'S TERMS TO NO MORE THAN 8 YEARS.

Washington, Dec. 10.—Representative Clayton, an Alabama Democrat, yesterday offered in the House a resolution to the effect that it is the sense of the House that no man should hold the office of President for more than eight years.

The resolution reads:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of this House, the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the Presidential office after their second terms, has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our Republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic and fraught with peril to our free institutions."

Mr. Clayton intends to press the resolution for consideration, and, if possible, place the Republicans of the House on record in regard to their feelings in the matter just now. It is said that a similar resolution, offered by the late Representative Springer, of Illinois, was adopted by the House by a large vote at the time eher was much talk of nominating President Grant for a third term.

DEATH CHAIR WORKS WELL.

Tests Show State's First Electrocution Here Is Likely to Be Without Hitch.

The final test of the death chair in the electrocution house at the State prison at Trenton, in readiness for the execution of sentence this week upon Saverio di Giovanni, has been made by the electric company which installed the apparatus. The representative of the company said yesterday that everything worked perfectly. Tests were made both by an electric lightboard containing a series of lamps and also by a water rheostat.

Both these tests showed that the apparatus worked properly. A further test was made to ascertain if the electrodes which will be against the body of Saverio di Giovanni this week would burn the flesh. This trial showed that the chair and equipment were all right in this particular also.

Blankets and Comfortables

Make very sensible and desirable Xmas gifts, and we never had such a stock of good qualities and at such low prices. We had the good fortune to secure them before the advance in prices.

The Celebrated Muncy Mills Blankets, ranging in price from $3.50 to $15.00 a pair.

The famous Corkran Brothers' Comfortables, absolutely clean and sanitary, very fluffy and light, from $1.50 to $7.98 each.

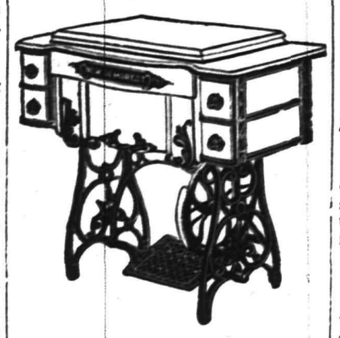
A Bissell Carpet Sweeper

Is just the thing; a useful and serviceable article and one that will last for years, and they are very inexpensive; $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 and $3.50 each.

Dolls! Dolls!!

The most beautiful French dolls you've ever seen, just as natural as life; we direct special attention to those at 98c, $1.50 and $1.98; others from 25c up.

Demorest Sewing Machines



What could be more acceptable for a Christmas gift than a good sewing machine; join our club, it costs only a dollar and it permits you to pay for the machine on easy monthly payments, and enables you to buy

A $30.00 Machine for $19.50
A $35.00 Machine for $21.50
A $40.00 Machine for $22.50
A $50.00 Machine for $25.00

These prices include a full set of attachments and a 10-year guarantee on the machine; make your selection now and we will hold and deliver it at Christmas time.

FOR MEN

Neckwear, Suspenders, in fancy boxes, bath robes and house jackets, dress suit cases and bags, collars and cuffs, night shirts and pajamas, silk handkerchiefs and mufflers, plain and initial handkerchiefs, kid gloves, driving and auto gloves, etc.

Sale of Vases at Half-Price

Importer's samples of such well known ware as Royal Warwick, Chelsea, Ameresque and Carlstadt, very artistic shapes and just the thing for gifts; prices ranging from 98c up to $9.50.

Framed Pictures

Make very desirable gifts. We've an elegant line to choose from, water colors, etchings, pastels, lithographs, photo colors, etc., etc., at 39c, 50c, 69c, 98c, $1.50 and $1.98.

Handkerchiefs for Xmas

We did an immense holiday business in handkerchiefs last year and this season we expect to eclipse those records. The showing includes handkerchiefs from the best Belfast, St. Gall and American manufacturers, which you will find marked at the very lowest prices.

Furniture for Xmas

Many persons would appreciate a piece of furniture instead of some fancy article. We suggest the following: Parlor and Library Tables, Jardiniere Stands, Morris Chairs, Parlor Rockers, Book Cases, Writing Desks, Music Cabinets, Buffets, Couches and Bamboo Furniture.

PHYSICAL CULTURE TRIUMPHS OVER DISEASE

Mr. Bernarr Macfadden, who will lecture at The Casino on the evening of Wednesday, December 11th, conducts four large sanatoriums, two at Battle Creek, Mich., and two at Physical Culture City, N. J. Patients are received from all parts of the country, and are immediately put on a special "PHYSICAL CULTURE" diet and started on the road to renewed health by means of necessary exercises, etc., particularly prescribed in each individual case, by competent practitioners. Absolutely no drugs are used in the treatment. In his lecture Mr. Macfadden will tell how some of his wonderful cures are brought about.

Mr. Ferguson, As he came to the sanatorium.

Mr. Ferguson, As he left.

The portraits reproduced herewith are those of Mr. J. R. Ferguson, a resident of Chester, Conn., who, before being treated by Mr. Macfadden at his sanatorium, had been ailing for several years. For nine months previous to being treated by Mr. Macfadden, he was not able to stand on his feet; his hips and legs were apparently paralized and were gradually growing useless. He had tried all of the best physicians, without benefit. Notwithstanding their most earnest efforts, he was slowly, but surely, going toward the grave. He heard of the wonderful results achieved by Mr. Macfadden and his physical culture treatment, and determined to give this method a trial and placed himself in Mr. Macfadden's hands.

Please carefully note the results. One week after Mr. Ferguson began a course under the methods Mr. Macfadden prescribed, he was able to stand and take a few steps. Day by day he was able to increase the number of these steps. In three weeks' time, with the aid of two canes, he was walking a considerable distance, and within less than four weeks he walked nearly a half mile to have his photograph taken.

Mr. Ferguson is a Mason and a well-known and respected citizen of Chester, Conn. The wonderful results obtained in his case will be vouched for by both himself and his friends. His cure was brought about absolutely without the use of drugs. Mr. Macfadden believes the drug cure for a disease is a thing of the past. Drugs do not cure a disease, they simply modify symptoms. The chronic disease is usually made more chronic through the use of drugs.

Weakness is a crime. You have no business to be sick. If you are sick and ailing it is your own fault. A remedy is surely within your reach in Mr. Macfadden's Physical Culture Treatment. Come to his lecture and hear him set forth his theories and tell of the wonderful results he has achieved in treating diseases; or, if you wish a free diagnosis of your case, write to him at his main office, Flat Iron Building, New York City.

WILKESBARRE WILL WIN.

By the Dispute Between New Haven and Other Roads.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., is to profit largely by the dispute between the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad and other roads, regarding freight rates, so it is intimated in a letter received yesterday by Secretary Bennett, of the Board of Trade, from the Delaware and Hudson Railroad officials, who spent some time in Wilkesbarre last week inspecting the property of the company.

There is now being completed, there, a connection between the Delaware and Hudson Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad, which will permit of an interchange of 1,000 cars a day.

It is understood that much of the freight for and from New England from points West and South will now come to Wilkesbarre by way of the Pennsylvania and then be transferred to the Delaware and Hudson and the Boston and Maine.

NEWS IN THE SUBURBS.

PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

Captain H. B. Saunders, of "Hawk's Nest," Washington Valley, is spending several weeks at New Orleans in the interest of the Lloyd Insurance Co.

Mrs. Peter Smith, who has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Clark, has returned to her home at Lincoln.

Mrs. George Stiliger, of Front street, has been entertaining relatives from Watchung over Sunday.

A meeting of the Township Committee will be held Friday night in the town rooms.

Fanwood Council, R. A., holds its semi-annually meeting in the Library rooms tonight.

Mr. and Mrs. George Harper have returned from a visit with relatives in New York.

CHRISTMAS TREE AND PRESENTS FOR CLUB MEN.

The Christmas tree, smoker and distribution of presents at the meeting of the Men's Club last night was an occasion of great jollity last night, for the affair was a mammoth joke arranged by the entertainment committee. In the first place the "Christmas tree," though impressively concealed behind a curtain, proved but a single branch of pine, and the presents, distributed by Hugh Fox as Santa Claus, whose coming was heralded with jingling sleigh bells, were selected because of their humorous appropriateness to the recipients. Their distribution caused much merriment, for Santa had a limerick verse attached to each one, and these were read as the presents were distributed to each of the members.

After the distribution, the evening was spent in a social way, with music and informal speeches by the members of the club, about thirty of whom were present.

Suburban Roll of Honor.

The roll of honor in the various suburban schools in the vicinity of South Plainfield and New Market is as follows: Parker school—Madelene Reidy, Rosalie Fitzsimmons, Bernard Reidy, Charles Wuelfing, John Van Fleet, Joseph Naylor, Charles Doyle, John Doyle, Mary Harlow, Laura Roberts, Madelene Reilley, May Duffy, Helen Richards, Margaret Hamilton, Marjorie Roberts, George Brower, Peter McDonough, Frederick Teeple, Martin McDonough. Maple Grove school—Ruth Morris, Emily Brentnall, Rhoda Gray, Lizzie Norwey, Alice Brentnall, Lena Pyatt, Ethel Brentnall, Marguerite Winkelholz, Marion Wikoff, Russell Pyatt, Melvin Pyatt. Randolphville school—Mary Keller, Mabel Van Nuis. Union school—Ida Walker, Fannie Clark and Grace Gerickunt.

Endeavorers' Reports.

The Congregational church Endeavorers held their monthly business meeting last night, when encouraging reports were presented by Athol Newman, of the lookout committee; Miss Bessie Millar, of the missionary committee; Miss Myra Emmons, of the social committee; Miss Jennie Millar, of the music committee, and Miss Ethel Millar, of the prayer-meeting committee. A committee will be appointed by President McClymont to act as an auxiliary to the Junior Endeavor Society.

Given 40 Days In County Jail.

Given her choice between $40 and forty days in the county jail, Lizzie Saueracher, who was arrested with Joseph Doyle Sunday afternoon on a drunk spree in the borough, selected the forty days and was taken to Somerville today by Chief Marshal George Weiss, of the North Plainfield force. Joseph Doyle was fined $3, which he paid.

STATE NEWS BRIEFS.

The Millville Council has decided to appeal the sewer assessment case of Thomas S. Simmons to the Court of Errors and Appeals.

Attacked by a dog near his home yesterday, Willard Garrison, six years old, of 1159 Lemon street, Camden, was bitten on the left leg. He was cared for at Cooper Hospital.

Alexander Kawalewski, nine years old, was shot in the left cheek and forehead by Frank Reck, thirteen years old, who was gunning for sparrows at Trenton Saturday. The boy will recover.

Clarence Massey, clerk in the Atlantic City postoffice, has been appointed assistant postmaster at Palm Beach, Fla. The postmaster at Palm Beach demanded an experienced assistant who was familiar with resort work.

While gunning for rabbits Saturday Francis Reeves, son of Freeholder George Reeves, of Millville, was shot in the foot by the explosion of a companion's gun. He was hurried to the Emergency Hospital at Millville, and Dr. Neal, assisted by Drs. Kirk, Charlesworth and Sheppard, amputated the foot.

A petition has been filed in the office of County Clerk Watson T. Sooy, of Burlington county, by M. Walker Maitland, who has decided to contest the election of Joseph S. Swain, Republican councilman of the Second ward, of Bordentown. The petition alleges that the counting of fifteen marked ballots gave Swain a majority.

A force of surveyors will be busy all this week, at Petty's Island, getting in readiness for the transforming of the barren tract in the Delaware river into a park. In the near future a big one-story building will be erected on the island for a place of abode for the army of laborers who will be engaged in the work of transformation.

A demand is to be made upon the Shore Fast Line when the corporation appears before Atlantic City's Council to secure privileges to extend its tracks, that the transfer system be abolished, that all cars be run to the inlet, and that it make some arrangement about eventually paving the streets over which its new tracks are to be constructed.

Fifty of Merchantville's representative men and a delegation of the leading citizens of Pensauken Township assembled in the Borough Council chamber yesterday afternoon and organized the Sabbath Observance League, with George W. Cole, president; Arthur P. Truscott, vice-president; Charles S. Haig, secretary, and J. H. North, treasurer.

Probably the finest collection of Indian relics in South Jersey belongs to Freeholder Thomas L. Munyon, of Richwood. It consists of 3,500 arrow heads, spear heads, fish spears, axes, banner stones, corn mill, pestles, mortar, celts, paint cups, chisels and gouges. Most of the relics were found by Mr. Munyon himself during the last twenty years in southern New Jersey.

Mrs. Jennie McRiley, of Fifty-fifth street and Woodland avenue, Camden, was awakened from her slumbers early yesterday morning while she was visiting relatives in Birch street by a squirrel in one of the lower rooms. She went to a second-story window, lost her balance and fell out. She was taken to the Cooper Hospital, where it was found that she had received severe bruises.

PRESIDENT WANTS THESE U. S. OFFICIALS DECORATED.

Washington, Dec. 10.—The President yesterday sent to the Senate a list of decorations sought to be conveyed by the foreign powers to American officials.

Included in the list is a gift in the shape of a large silver urn presented by the Central American republics to Commander E. Richard Mulligan, now on duty in the Navigation Bureau, who was in command of the Yorktown when the friction arose between the Central American republics last summer, which he was largely instrumental in removing.

The President also again submits for the action of the Senate the list of decorations formerly submitted, but which Congress failed to act upon, and the President recommends that the persons named be allowed to accept them.

Transacted Only Routine Business.

Only routine business was transacted at the December meeting of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, held at the Casino, last night. The report of the medical board for November is as follows: Patients remaining at date of last report, 36; admitted, 52; total number treated, 88; discharged cured, 34; improved, 12; not improved, 1; died, 5; remaining, 37; hospital days, 1,137; operations, 69. In the dispensary there were 69 patients, 194 visits of patients and two operations.

REAL ESTATE BUSINESS

(By William Jeffery.)

The real estate business is unlike other kinds of business, in that it requires not merely ordinary business training, but a knowledge of matters which appertain specially to that business. A real estate agent should know not only what sales have been made that tend to fix prices, but what negotiations there have been. Not only must he judge of what land and houses are worth today, but he must be a good judge of what increase there will likely be in the value of the land, so that his client may profit by the labor of others. He should thoroughly understand the equitable adjustment of the many differences that arise between buyer and seller, giving each a square deal. He should see that his customers when buying property get what legally belongs to them; and that when selling property they do not part with more than they are selling. He should realize thoroughly the importance of not tangling titles and know how to avoid doing so.

The real estate agent should know from practice how to draw all forms of contracts, deeds, bonds and mortgages, assignments of mortgages, leases, liens, etc., dates when taxes, water rates and assessments are due, and he should always ask the purchaser to have the title searched by some competent lawyer or title company.

Many agents do not understand these matters, and consequently serious complications arise. No one would take a horse to a jeweller to be shod or a watch to a druggist to be repaired; and yet some people think that anyone can attend to the vastly more important matter of the purchase or sale of real estate. An illustration of the effect of oversight was related once in the New York Times. A widow in Rochester, Ind., rented a property for a term of years and forgot to reserve the right of entrance through a hallway to rooms she retained upstairs. She had to pass through the tenants parlor to get to the stairs. He therefore protested and later served her with a trespass notice, and she and her son now have to climb a ladder to the roof and enter through the attic.

To the person who has never bought property or been "stuck" all real estate men look alike, but as the widow discovered there is a wide difference between the agent who gives a real service and the agent who merely makes a commission.

At the closing of the title, the seller should exhibit his receipt for taxes and arrears of taxes and assessments if any. He should produce his fire insurance policy covering the improvements, if there is a mortgage on the property the holder of the mortgage should have the original policy and the buyer should receive a duplicate of it, allowances for the premiums should be calculated, and upon the closing of the title the new owner's name should be substituted for the old owner's name on both policies. When there is a mortgage receipts for the last payment of interest should be subbitted to the buyer.

In case of tenancy an assignment of the rents to the new owner should be obtained in writing, also assignment of the leases if any and the rents should be pro rated to date of the closing unless otherwise agreed upon. Buyer should be placed in possession of the property at the closing of the title.

Any and all charges against the property should be paid upon the closing of the title. Remember, that after the title is closed the buyer has recourse only to such warranty as is definitely recited in the deed. A bargain and sale deed gives no redress whatever as against the immediate grantor. A quit-claim deed conveys nothing; it only shows that some one who is not the owner relinquishes some real or alleged claim against the property. Finally, a sufficient title is not what a title company will ayways guarantee. All encumbrances against the property should be received in detail in the conveyance, as it may be necessary to assume such encumbrances as part of the purchase price expressed in the deed.

When buying vacant land first find out if the land is free and clear, and if it is mortgaged ascertain how a release from the lien of the mortgage may be obtained, and agreement between you and the seller cannot change the conditions expressed in a mortgage covering the property, the mortgagee should be seen and his agreement taken in conjunction with the seller's agreement that the land shall be released from the mortgage upon payment of so much money, in accordance with the terms of the mortgage. When buying it is always best to engage the services of a good lawyer or title company right from making of the contract, for the action of the lawyer or the title company is based in the contract. A good real estate man will shape the deal for the lawyer or title company to take hold of in good clean shape.

It takes a good many years of study and experience to develop a first class real estate agent, so he can earn money enough for himself and get money for his client.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Most of us are too much devoted to the Arts of Peace to realize the aspects of the arts of war. The art of war is so far removed from the daily lives of most people that they have really had no opportunity to recognize the grim realism of warfare. Naval warfare particularly is shrouded in much mystery for most of us. But in his new program to be exhibited at the New Plainfield theatre, Thursday, Lyman H. Howe lifts the curtain and discloses a series of moving pictures of a naval attack that dispels the mystery. For it is indisputably the most realistic production ever secured, and as Mr. Howe has the sole American rights to reproduce it, it can be seen only at this exhibition. Not only does it depict the realism of naval welfare, but it reveals every day life in the navy most comprehensively.

One of the most striking and magnificent scenes ever presented on any stage is said to be the great wedding scene in "The Fatal Wedding," which appears at the New Plainfield theatre next Friday night. In order to add to the effectiveness of this scene, Sullivan, Harris & Woods, under whose management "The Fatal Wedding" is produced, have procured the services of the well-known organist, Miss Gertrude Haynes. Miss Haynes has a world-wide reputation as a church organist, and has attracted a great deal of attention with her "Choir Celestial." This consists of a choir of twenty-five boys. All of these boys are clothed in the regulation surplice and cassock, and as Miss Haynes plays upon a large organ, which is especially carried for the production, the boys march in upon a magnificent church setting, singing an appropriate selection, such as "The Palms," or "The Holy City." The effect is very impressive, and for a few moments the stage craft is entirely lost sight of while a religious ferver seems to dominate everything and everybody. This scene has again and again been declared the most effective ever presented on any stage. And yet, it is only one feature of many to be seen in "The Fatal Wedding." It can scarcely be wondered at that the attraction as a whole is proving such an immense success, and winning universal praise from press and public alike.

"The Great Divide," an American play by an American poet, will be the piece de resistance at the New Plainfield theatre next Saturday afternoon and night. William Vaughn Moody, professor of English literature at the University of Chicago, is the author. This truly great play has achieved one of the biggest successes in the history of the American stage. It has a New York run of nearly two years to its credit. The Henry Miller production will be seen here. This means that it will be artistically correct and adequate in every detail.

Of the five plays that Golden-voiced Al. H. Wilson has produced during his short career as a star, the new "Metz in the Alps," which he will produce in this city next Monday night, is said to be the best. During the performance, Mr. Wilson will introduce several new songs, one of which is "Fairest Flower of All," a Wilson love ditty that is already very popular in the cities where Mr. Wilson has appeared this season.

The New York Tribune.

The newspaper in the home is a necessity. Get one that can be safely read by the entire family. The Tribune is a paper that prints all the news of the world in such a manner as to be readable without offending the laws of good taste. It is a human paper— one edited by men and women; and while, at times, it may occasionally make mistakes, its readers believe and trust in it. The Daily Tribune is more than a continuous history; it is and has been for over sixty years the great exponent of progressive national thought and fills a larger place in American history than any other newspaper. It contains special articles on nearly every subject which interests intelligent and clean-minded people, to say nothing of the instructive editorial articles and reviews of Books, Music, Art and Drama. In fact, there is nothing ever printed in The Tribune that will not instruct and educate, just as it is a fact that there is nothing ever printed that will offend decency.

With The Sunday Tribune you get a handsome illustrated supplement of timely topics and a superb twenty-page magazine with colored cover, which contains most interesting fiction and short stories by well known authors. This, with other sections, goes to make up one of the most complete and interesting Sunday newspapers published.

The Daily and Sunday Tribune is the ideal family newspaper. If you are not familiar with it you owe it to yourself and family to at least try a month's subscription to verify the above statement. A dollar bill sent to the Circulation Department of The Tribune, New York, will bring The Daily and Sunday Tribune into your family for one month. Or send $10 for one year.

Whenever you contemplate building see Titus H. Laury, the East Front street contractor, and he will give you a satisfactory estimate.

The CASTLE of LIES

BY ARTHUR HENRY VESEY

(COPYRIGHT, 1906, by D. APPLETON & COMPANY)

But did Madame de Varnier believe me so complaisant a fool, that, like another Bottom, I was expected in this modern Midsummer Night's Dream to accept this deference without question? I became more and more convinced that she did not. Once she even referred to the events of the night before in such a manner that I believed her not ignorant of my true condition. If she were persuaded that I had been acting a part then, that would account for her confidence in expecting me to continue acting that part. It would give her encouragement that I was the willing tool she looked for.

And suppose that she really believed that, did she think that I expected no reward? She had hinted that in serving her ends I was to serve myself as well. But Madame de Varnier was not the kind of woman to believe that a man would be allured by a promise so vague. Then the reward?

She had protested that she had not expected me to fall in love with her. She had protested that, but in the same breath she had confessed a half-resolve to bring me to her feet. Now as she exerted every charm of coquetry she was giving the lie to her own words. Oh, the reward was obvious enough, if I chose to take it.

"We will smoke our cigarettes in my favorite music room. You must hear Dr. Starva play on the 'cello. You have had the piano carefully tuned, Jacques?"

"All is in readiness," replied the servant, as he preceded us with candles.

Dr. Starva had pushed back his chair eagerly. For the first time since I had met him his face lost something of its heavy sullen expression.

"My fingers have not the practice," he said modestly, "but to play with Madame de Varnier—ah, that is worth while."

We were in the music room that Madame de Varnier had described to me so enthusiastically the day before.

Dimly lighted with wax candles, paneled in dark oak to the ceiling, the floor waxed and polished to a dazzling luster, it was a room almost bare, but it had its melancholy charm. There was little furniture. At one end of the room was a row of carved seats built into the wall. There were no pictures or tapestries. The one touch of color was the vivid flame of blazing logs.

"The strife of the world, its lies and its shams, I leave behind when I enter here," said Madame de Varnier sentimentally. "Look, I throw open this casement. The noisy Aare drowns my voice. Beyond, you see the moonlight on the valleys, and still beyond, the mountains. This is your seat. Once this was a chapel; in these carved seats the monks chanted vespers; in the seat of honor which you occupy drowsed the father superior. When you hear the enchanting melodies of Dr. Starva you will not have lived in vain."

This hour at least was innocent. Perhaps it was the lull before the storm, but why should I look for clouds when the heavens were clear?

The long, darkly paneled room, its shining floor seeming to rise and fall mysteriously in the flickering firelight, the noisy murmur of the stream below, the white moonlight that struggled feebly through the casement windows—all had its charm. And these two adventurers, unscrupulous and conscienceless, had abandoned themselves for the moment to the joy of their music.

I looked over toward Madame de Varnier. The shaded light of the candles fell on her white shoulders. The splendor of her beauty had never seemed more seductive.

I asked myself incredulously if this dreaming woman was the desperate adventuress whom Locke had warned me against.

Slowly she looked where I sat; I seemed to draw her eyes toward me. She smiled vaguely, a smile that was adorable—yes, I could almost persuade myself that it was the smile of an innocent girl. For a moment I was content to forget the unpleasant task that was before me; to invest even the monster by her side in the garb of humanity.

The servant who had shown me to my rooms appeared at the door, letters on his salver. I held up my hand warningly to him that he should not disturb them, and motioned that he bring the letters to me. He did so without either of the musicians noticing his entrance.

The sonata of Beethoven swept to its glorious climax. I started to my feet to take the letters to Madame de Varnier.

But without a pause Dr. Starva began a tender romance. The woman sat at the piano, her hands falling idly to her lap.

Again she smiled across the room at me. But now it was no longer spontaneous. The lips held something of that indefinable cruelty of that woman of the Renaissance made famous by Da Vinci. I frowned; I refused to meet that smile.

Then, as I looked down deliberately, I felt myself turn pale. A shudder convulsed me.

I was gazing in horror at an envelope that bore the interdicted stamp of Bulgaria, the death-mask.

Did she know the ghastly significance of that double stamp? Was she one of the desperate band that had doomed Ferdinand?

I resolved to play a hazardous experiment. I would thrust that stamp under her eyes without warning. Consummate actress though she was, she would find it difficult to repress a tremor if she were guilty.

Dr. Starva's head was still bent lovingly over his 'cello. I reached the piano without disturbing him.

I placed the letters in front of Madame de Varnier, the envelope that bore the death-mask on the top of the little pile. I watched her closely.

She took the letters carelessly in her hands. The stamp at once arrested her attention. She regarded it with a frank curiosity. She even called my attention to it.

"It is one of the new issue," she whispered, so as not to disturb Dr. Starva; and continued to sort her letters.

I was almost convinced of her innocence, but not quite. I had yet my experiment to play.

She had opened one of the letters and was engrossed in its contents. As for Dr. Starva, he was lost to the world.

I took the envelope that bore the mysterious symbol, and placing it in such a manner that the death-mask could be most easily seen by the woman, I began to trace the likeness of Prince Ferdinand, meanwhile watching her intently.

Her letter was short. Its meaning had excited her strangely. For some time she was regardless of my action. But presently she followed the motions of my pencil as I traced the eyes closed in death, the drooping mouth, and the gaping wound.

Still my pencil moved slowly but carefully over the features of the doomed prince. I began to think I must be more explicit after all.

And then her hands fell lifeless on the keys. The crash echoed discordantly in the empty room. Dr. Starva looked up in angry surprise. Madame de Varnier had fainted.

His Hairy Hand Closed Over the Letter.

Dr. Starva shuffled rapidly to her side; he shook her shoulder.

"Sophie! Sophie!" he cried, and then he saw the letter and its stamp.

His face was suddenly distorted. His hairy hand closed over the letter. She held it rigid even in her unconsciousness. He unbent her jeweled fingers with cruel strength. Now he looked at me with the suspicion and hate of a savage beast brought to bay.

"How much do you know?" his blazing eyes asked. "And if I do know?" mine answered.

Slowly Madame de Varnier opened her eyes. Equally anxious, Starva and myself watched her recover consciousness.

I was quite convinced now that she had not been aware of the significance of that stamp. The horror that had deprived her of her reason for the time being proved that. The fierce haste with which Dr. Starva had snatched the letter from her lifeless hand and had concealed it, bore out my conviction. Then if my surmises were correct, would she communicate to Dr. Starva her newly acquired knowledge?

"It was the heat, I think, and the fatigue of the journey," were the first words she spoke. I heard them with relief. Beyond question she wished to conceal from Starva that she had seen the death-mask.

Whether he was satisfied with her reasons was less certain. He paced the length of the room, his head bent in thought; his intertwined fingers, moving agitatedly, betrayed his concern. Madame de Varnier carefully avoided my gaze and played idly. But I noticed that if Dr. Starva had been enraged that she had seen the letter with its death-mask, Madame de Varnier was anxious that he should not know of the existence of the letter that had excited her. It had fallen to the floor. When his back was turned she had stooped swiftly and placed it in the bosom of her dress.

Was the letter she was so careful to hide from him merely personal? Or was its message of moment? If so, if it were concerned with the strange game these two were playing, it meant that either mistrusted the other.

I welcomed such a possibility. That fact might simplify my own action. At least it showed that Madame de Varnier was not abjectly the creature of this infamous scoundrel.

The strained situation was happily relieved by the entrance of the servant who had brought in the letters. Instinctively the three of us assumed a certain unconcern, as is the manner of the world before servants.

He brought a card to Madame de Varnier. She took it from the salver quietly, but her hand trembled as she read the name engraved on it.

We had all three heard that name before. Its crisp, Anglo-Saxon nomenclature gave one the impression of a strong, dogged personality that pursued, and yet pursued.

"Captain Reginald Forbes!"

That was the name she read in a low voice.

CHAPTER XVII.

Captain Forbes Intrudes.

There was a silence lasting several seconds. Panic was written on both their faces. Evidently they had looked for no such intrusion as this—above all for no visitor so inconvenient as the king's messenger. They had confidently counted on a clear field for the execution of their plans. That they should have been traced to the chateau so easily and so quickly threw them into consternation. Dr. Starva was the first to recover his presence of mind.

"Whom does he wish to see this time?" he demanded harshly.

"He asks for his Excellency, the English ambassador," replied the servant, looking at me askance. "But if he is engaged, or not well, he is anxious to speak with madam."

At first I was surprised that the man had not brought the card directly to myself. It was strange that he should ignore me if he had been given to understand that I was Sir Mortimer. But if he were in the confidence of Madame de Varnier he would do precisely that.

Frankly, the coming of Captain Forbes at this time was a surprise scarcely less disagreeable for me than for them. To-morrow, or the day after, he would have been perhaps only too welcome. But now the intrusion was premature. It interfered with my own plans as well as theirs.

More than that, I could have wished myself in a position to forewarn him, to explain my tactics. It looked as if I were again in danger of being caught red-handed in a criminal deception. More than ever would Captain Forbes be convinced that I was one of the conspirators if he discovered at this moment that I was not Sir Mortimer.

The man and woman conversed together excitedly in a barbaric tongue. Dr. Starva, it was evident, was vehemently advocating some plan; Madame de Varnier opposing it. But the shock to which she had been subjected previous to the coming of Captain Forbes had left her unstrung, almost apathetic. Hitherto the man had been sulkily subservient to the woman; now his animal strength fought for the ascendency. He was brushing away her agitated protests. It was he who commanded the servant:

"Show this Captain Forbes to the armory. I shall see him myself."

Again he spoke fiercely to Madame de Varnier. She listened to him in silence, her eyes cast down. He strode to the door, stood there a moment hesitating, then left the room, shutting the door behind him.

Madame de Varnier remained where he had left her, trembling violently, her hands covering her face. This was my opportunity to appeal to the woman, and not the adventuress. I took her unresisting hand and led her to one of the carved seats.

"Madame de Varnier, it is a desperate game you are playing," I said, sternly yet gently. "I don't know what the stakes are, but you are not going to win them."

A white hand clung to my coat sleeve. "Why do you say that?" she cried, staring at me with affrighted eyes.

I pointed silently to the card she still held in her hand.

"There is one factor to be reckoned with."

She tossed her head in defiance. "Dr. Starva has reckoned with him already, my friend. Perhaps not in the best way, but effectually at least. And the other?"

"Well, there is myself."

She smiled on me wanly. "If you were an enemy that might be more serious, I admit. But I have reckoned with you. You are to be my friend. You are to help me."

"That remains to be seen. But the third and most serious factor is treachery," I added quietly.

"My God! Treachery!"

"Do you trust Dr. Starva absolutely? Dare you tell me that the death-mask had as little meaning for him as for you, until I showed you that significance?"

"But you understood its meaning as well as he. Who are you that you should have this knowledge?"

"I know, perhaps, more than you think, Madame de Varnier."

CRAWFORD MINES

IN CANADA

READ OUR OFFER

By subscribing to the underwriting offer we are able to make to our customers and investors, you can secure an interest in these great mines on basis of

250 SHARES FOR $50

This opportunity will remain open only a few days. We consider ourselves very fortunate in being able to offer this proposition to our clients.

WE NOW ADVISE AND EVEN URGE our customers and investors to secure an interest in the Crawford Mines. We believe it is one of the greatest opportunities to make a fortune that has ever come into this section of New Jersey.

We want you to know about these mines. We want you to come to our office, if possible, and examine a large quantity of ore received direct from the mines. We want to hand you printed matter, which will explain all about these mines, including statements from EMINENT ENGINEERS AND MINING MEN WHO HAVE VISITED THE PROPERTIES, and who are familiar with the different ores contained in the great veins now being developed by the sinking of several shafts.

If you can't call at the office, we ask you to WRITE US IMMEDIATELY for this information. We tell you that we are presenting an opportunity to invest in a mine that, we believe, will make one of the WORLD'S GREATEST MINES. This is the kind of an investment we want our customers to have.

SHARES WILL GO TO $10

You can subscribe to the underwriting and get 250 shares of Crawford Stock for $50. Only a few more subscriptions can be accepted to this Syndicate. When this offer is closed no more Crawford Stock can be had at any price.

We expect to see Crawford Stock worth at least $10 PER SHARE. It is believed that the development of these mines will establish this value. They may go to $100 a share. To make a valuation of $10 per share for Crawford Stock it will only become necessary to prove these mines to be worth only $6,000,000. This is not a large figure for a big mine. In fact it is believed that the Crawford mines are more likely to become worth $60,000,000. This latter figure would put Crawford Shares on a valuation of $100 EACH.

At $10 PER SHARE 100 Shares would be worth $1,000. You can get 250 SHARES NOW for only $50. You can pay this amount at the rate of only $5 per month.

ACT QUICKLY

To get any interest in this great offer you must act quickly. IT WILL PERMIT OF NO DELAY. There is only a small amount open for subscription, and this is the only stock of the Crawford Company that can be offered in the United States. When this is taken, no more can be secured for anything like this price.

The chance of a lifetime is before you. Do not miss it. Come to our office, and see the ore. If you cannot come to the office, write us immediately for the amount you wish to invest. Subscribers to this underwriting will get 250 shares of Crawford Stock for $50. Any person can subscribe for AS MANY $50 INTERESTS as they desire, while this offer is open, and can pay 10 per cent. Cash and 10 per cent. per month.

Dining Room Changes Hands.

The dining room at the Iroquois Hotel, which has been conducted by W. H. Barnes, has been taken over by William Stoble, of New York, well known to Jersey resort patrons. He formerly conducted restaurants at Seabright and nearby places. He will make a specialty of German dishes and tonight will entertain a gathering of friends at a hasenpfeffer supper.

A. M. Kinsman, chief engineer of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, who has been visiting his brother, F. E. Kinsman, of Sherman avenue, returned home yesterday.

PLEASING RECITAL AT MRS. J. B. DUMONT'S HOME.

The third and last piano recital in the series by Misis Carolyn Beebe and Eduard Dethier was given at the home of Mrs. J. B. Dumont, on Stelle avenue, Friday afternoon, and like the previous ones was largely attended and greatly enjoyed. These famous artists who have appeared several times before Plainfield audiences have thoroughly established their claims to recognition among local music lovers.

The program comprised selections by Brahm, Bernard and Grieg and the renditioin of each number was brilliant and called forth hearty applause. They included the more modern compositions written between 1833 and 1907.

Shungopavi at Y. M. C. A.

Shungopavi, a full-blooded Moqui Indian, entertained a large audience at the Y. M. C. A. last night in the third of the Star Course of entertainments of the association. He told folk-lore legends and did some native tricks in magic. Miss Harriet E. Stirling, contralto, appeared in several numbers. Miss Kate Gordon Munch,, reader and violinist, won applause by her monologues and readings and her instrumental selections.

Mrs. Kate Williams, of Roselle, has been spending a few days with friends in Plainfield.

Football and General Sports

Y.M.C.A. FIVE OVERWHELMS BROOKLYN TEAM, 101-31

With basketball enthusiasts in the gallery cheering them on to "make it a hundred," the Y. M. C. A. five scored 101 points in the game with the Twenty-sixth Ward Y. M. C. A., of Brooklyn, at the local gymnasium last night, when Collier's goal from a foul and Rumsey's final basket, just before time was called, gave the Plainfield five the biggest score of the season in basketball. The visitors could make but 31 points.

The local five didn't have a very hard proposition in the Brooklynites, and showed some fast work in passing and some excellent shooting. They kept up a fast clip through both halves, and the game was never in doubt. At the end of the first half the score was 40-15. Loizeux, of the local five, scored 15 baskets from the floor, but a strained ankle compelled him to leave the game in the second half and his place was taken by Miner. Kappes caged the ball ten times for the visitors. Because of an injury to Dustwalt, the visitors had but four men in the game during the last few minutes of play. The summaries:

Brooklyn—Kappes, lf; Dustwalt, rf; Little, c; Seegars, lg; Hurd, rg.

Baskets from the floor, Loizeaux, 15; Kappes, 10; Rumsey, 9; Collier, 9; Gilmore, 8; Gavett, 4; Miner, 3; Dustwalt, 3; Little, 2; Hurd. Goals from fouls, Collier, 5; Kappes, 3. Referee, Charles B. Morse. Timer, G. L. Listman. Twenty minutes halves.

SENIORS AND LEADERS WIN IN LOCAL LEAGUE GAMES

The Y. M. C. A. Seniors defeated the five from the First Baptist church in a local league contest at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium last night by a score of 39-19. There were two league contests scheduled in connection with the Brooklyn game, but the Congregational church five could only get three members on the floor and the Leaders team claimed the game on a forfeit, 2-0, according to the rules of the league.

The First Baptist five, playing with a handicap of twelve points, could only score one basket in the first half, and the score was 15 to 14 in favor of the Seniors when the whistle blew. In the second half, the church five were clearly outclassed, and the final score was 39 to 19. Jacot, for the Seniors, did especially good shooting, caging the ball nine times, and making five points from the foul line. The summaries follow:

Seniors—Martin, Woodland and Shepherd, forwards; Jacot, centre; Ackor, Woodland and Martin, guards. First Baptist church—Fountain and Douglass, forwards; Jerry Manning, centre; Denton, Fountain and Speer, guards.

Baskets from the floor, Jacot, 9; Martin, 3; Shepherd, 2; Woodland, 2; Fountain, 2; Denton, 2; Manning, 2. Goals from fouls, Jacot, 5; Shepherd, Douglass. Seniors awarded a point for being interfered with while shooting a basket. Refree, Charles B. Morse. Timer, C. L. Listman. Twenty minute halves.

INDEPENDENT GUN CLUB RE-ELECTS ITS OFFICERS.

The election of officers for the Independent Gun Club held at a meeting at Dr. Leonard's office last night resulted in the selection of the same officers to serve during the coming year. Henry H aurand will again be the club's captain, C. W. Krausse, first lieutenant; S. F. Sabocher, second lieutenant; Louis Van Dyke, financial secretary; B. F. Leonard, corresponding secretary; Dr. C. W. Leonard, treasurer. These officers, with John Wirth and Christian Stoeckle will form the board of directors of the organization. F. B. Leonard will be the officer at the rifle range and L. M. Van Dyke will be the officer at the traps. The newly elected standard bearer is Titus H. Laury. Reports were received from the board of directors and the treasurer, showing the association to be in flourishing condition financially and socially.

TWO YEARS FOR BANKER.

Joseph Deutsch, of Perth Amboy, Sentenced by Judge Booraem for Embezzlement.

In court at New Brunswick yesterday Judge Theodore Booraem sentenced Joseph Deutsch to two years in State prison on conviction of embezzlement. Deutsch conducted a banking business in Perth Amboy, and fled to Holland, leaving a deficit. He was extradited and tried. Before his sentence petitions were filed by Perth Amboy business men asking clemency for him. They argued that Deutsch's trouble had come because of illness when subordinates ruined his business.

In his trial he testified that he had run away because he had been advised by his lawyer to do so. The special count on which he was indicted and tried was the alleged embezzlement of $80, the funds of a depositor in his bank.

THE NORTH AMERICAN A WIDE-AWAKE PAPER.

The North American has recently shown that enterprise in news gathering is a paying investment. When it was announced that Secretary of War Taft was to make a trip around the world The North American at once realized that this journey must be of the greatest international import, and might mean the readjustment of national friendships and the smoothing over of international differences.

Of all the newspapers in the United States, The North American sent a special correspondent along with the secretary, and with the correspondent a special photographer.

LITERARY

There is no more timely theme for fiction than bridge, and the novelette which opens the December number of The Shart Set, entitled, "The Backsliders," by Dorothea Deakin, deals in a brilliant way with this vital subject. How a young girl acquires a tremendous passion for the game to the detriment of her character is told with remarkable power, and her final redemption is brought about in a most dramatic manner.

The December McClure's abounds in strong features. Burton J. Hendrick's "Great American Fortunes" is the history of the exploitation by a few men of the richest country in the world. The present instalment deals with Ryan and the Metropolitan Railway Company. Cleveland Moffett describes the evolution of the oldest of toys, the spinning-top, into the gyro-car, which bids fair to revolutionize the life of the world. Harry Smith Williams follows this up with "The Gyroscope and Ocean Travel," another use of the gyroscope, which promises to abolish seasickness.

THIS COURT IS LENIENT

Man Who Steals Horse and Rig Only Has to Serve One Month in Jail.

$50 FOR ILLEGAL SELLING.

But Offender Like Man Who Steals a Pump Is Put in Probation Officer's Charge—Very Mild Sentences.

Judge Edward S. Atwater in the Union County Court, today, disposed of a number of cases, some of interest to Plainfield. LeRoy Brown, who was found guilty of stealing one of Adam C. Blair's rigs on Mariners place, was sentenced to one month in the county jail, the court being inclined to look upon the theft as an unintentional act, it being said that Brown was intoxicated at the time.

Foster James, colored, of Fanwood, found guilty of selling liquor without a license, was put in charge of the probation officer for one year and fined $50. He has since gone out of business. Albert Outlaw, of the same place, found guilty of a similar charge, was released in $300 bail for sentence on Wednesday, December 18.

Warren McCauley, of Scotch Plains, who in company with William Boyle, who has since disappeared, was found guilty of breaking into the home of Boyle's employer at Scotch Plains and stealing a suction pump, was put in charge of the probation officer for one year and fined $25. McCauley had a bad record, but the court learned that he had stopped drinking and is now working. The fine is to be paid on the installment plan, every two weeks.

Andrew Cossi, an Italian, of Elizabeth, found guilty of selling indecent postal cards, was fined $50, and Jacob Brown, of Elizabeth, indicted on a charge of embezzling $23, entered a plea of non vult. He was put in charge of the probation officer for one year and fined $25.

Michael Venzio, the Italian of Elizabeth, who was found guilty of sending a "Black Hand" letter to Father Ferretti, of that place, was sentenced to one year in State Prison, the jury having recommended mercy. Immediately after sentence was pronounced, the prisoner's counsel, William R. Wilson, asked the court for a writ of error, which acted as a stay. The court was asked to fix bail until the claims could be passed upon by the proper court. Venzio was released in $1,000 bail.

FOWLER WANTS CREDIT BANK CURRENCY BASIS

The Hon. Charles N. Fowler, congressman from the Fifth district of New Jersey, which includes Union county, and chairman of the House committee on banking and currency, addressed the Illinois Manufacturers' Association last night in Chicago on the financial situation.

Mr. Fowler is a native of Illinois, his parents having migrated from Vermont to a prairie farm soon after their marriage. After mentioning this sentimental reason for his visit he introduced his subject as one which demanded the attention of all intelligent, brave and patriotic men.

Mr. Fowler's argument was that the recent panic was directly due to the unscientific basis of our national currency. He objected to the establishment of a central bank of issue as non-essential, a political impossibility and inexpedient. He urged, on the other hand, unification of our banking system, and the extension to national banks of the right to exercise all the powers of executors, administrators, guardians and trustees.

He declared that credits are the only proper basis for currency and that gold is the only proper reserve in a country where gold is the standard of value.

"Our reserves," he said, "must all be of the same character; gold or its equivalent; because gold is our standard of value.

"Our reserves in all of our financial institutions must be adequate to prove our credits and protect our depositors.

"We must adopt the principle of free interchange of bank book credits and bank note credits.

"Our bank notes must spring into existence precisely as checks and drafts do through business transactions.

"Our bank notes must be related to and based upon the consumable commodities of the country; going out with production and coming in with consumption."

CHRISTMAS FAIR BEGINS AT HEAVENLY REST CHURCH

With the parish house of the Church of the Heavenly Rest beautifully decorated with Christmas greens, laurel, pine and fir, and the general color scheme of the sale tables red and green, the Christmas fair and bazaar of the church opened yesterday afternoon and was continued in the evening with a large attendance. The affair will conclude tonight, when there will be special entertainment.

A feature of last night at the bazaar was the phonograph concert: Harry C. Fraleigh's instrument rendered selections from the opera, including numbers by Caruso, Melba, and Pryor's band. The affair is in charge of a committee of the women's gould of the parish, and there are several tables, where useful and fancy articles, especially suitable for Christmas presents, are being sold. Those at the various tables include the following:

Fancy table—Mrs. Merrill, Miss Alice Forster, Mrs. J. A. Babcock and Mrs. Fred Harris. Cake table—Mrs. Bennett and Mrs. Brooks. Chinese Laundry (grab bag)—Mrs. Sutton and Mrs. Campbell. Candy table—Mrs. Dudley Furgeson and Mrs. Chas. Stace. Ice cream table—Mrs. E. E. Brown, Mrs. Harry C. Fraleigh and Mrs. I. Peterson. A dozen members of the Girls' Club of the parish are in charge of a special table for fancy articles.

GOVERNOR'S DAY SLOW; FEW LEGISLATORS THERE

Governor's Day at Trenton yesterday was a sort of a fizzle, for none of the Camden delegation was at the State House and the expected fight to make Mr. Jess, of that county, the Speaker of the House, did not materalize. The attendance was the smallest since election, and as none of the leaders was at the Capitol the call for the caucus of Republican members of the House was not issued. At the caucus it is expected that teh officers of the House will be chosen.

Early in the day there was some talk of the Jess fight, but it gradually petered out and it now looks as though Prince, of Passaic, could not be beaten for the place. In connection with the Jess proposition Mr. Martin, the Colbyite, of Essex, was selected as the majority leader, and as he is also in the Prince combination for the same position, there is no doubt that the coming session will find the astute reformed as the leader.

Prince and Martin are said to look good to Governor-elect Fort, but before the slate is finally decided on it is reported that Mr. Fort will have a conference with State Assessor David Baird, of Camden. However, Baird's appointment to succeed himself depends upon Governor Fort, and it is not likely that the Camden leader will prove any serious obstacle to the wishes of the Governor-elect.

A new phase of the Prince matter is the fact that powerful corporate interests are insistent that Captain James Parker, of Passaic, must be selected as clerk of the House, even though Prince be sacrificed. The interests which are behind Parker feel that with Parker as clerk of the House they will have nothing to fear from Prince as Speaker and Martin as leader. It is said by some that the open fight which is being made to select Parker as clerk may yet work more harm to him than good.

FIRST ELECTROCUTION

Saverio di Giovanni, convicted of murder in Somerset county, was put to death in the State Prison at Trenton this morning, the first man to die in the electric chair in New Jersey. He was placed in position at 5:55 o'clock and the first contact was applied at 5:56. He was pronounced dead after the second shock.

F. S. Davis, electrician for New York State, operated the switchboard and the execution was witnessed by eighteen men, twelve of whom were jurors.

Saverio di Giovannia was ejected from a fruit store in Raritan, Somerset county, on September 22, 1907. Joseph Sansone, between whom and Di Giovanni there had previously been trouble, helped to put him out of the place. Di Giovanni picked up a stone and smashed a window of the fruit store and then started up the street. Sansone followed, intending to hand Di Giovanni over to a policeman. The men took opposite sides of the street and when Sansone was a little in advance of him Di Giovanni drew a revolver and fired, the bullet striking Sansone in the back. Di Giovanni then crossed the street and fired again at Sansone as the latter lay on the sidewalk, killing him.

RESIGNS AS SECRETARY AFTER 20 YRS. SERVICE

The annual meeting of the officers and teachers of the Sunday-school of Trinity Reformed church, held last night in the lecture room, was marked by a good attendance and considerable interest. Superintendent F. E. Smith presided. While no reports were presented at this meeting, the general condition of the school, both spiritually and financially, was a source of gratification to all.

The meeting was also marked by the resignation of Elias H. Bird as secretary. He held that position for twenty years and a committee was appointed to draft suitable resolutions. Mr. Bird retires because of a pressure of other duties and the fact that his health has not been good. Chauncey F. Colthar was chosen to succeed him. Another resignation was that of H. E. Gayle as treasurer. He too has held the office for many years, but being treasurer of the church he found the duties too much and asked to be relieved of one position. Charles M. Dolliver was chosen to succeed him.

Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, the pastor, was present and spoke a few words of encouragement to the officers and teachers for their excellent work during the past year and urged greater effort during the coming year.

The question of the time for holding the Christmas service was discussed and it was decided to hold it on Sunday night instead of the afternoon as proposed. The date will be announced later.

These officers and committees were chosen for the coming year: Superintendent, F. E. Smith; assistant, Horace J. Martin, Sr.; secretary, Chauncey F. Colthar; assistant secretary, Clarence Rittenhouse; treasurer, Charles M. Dolliver; librarian, H. C. Van Emburgh; assistants, Clarence Rittenhouse, LeRoy Woodhull, William Trembath, Bertram Leggett; pianist, Miss Lillian A. Force; precentor, Horace J. Martin, Sr.; superintendent Junior department, Mrs. L. R. Schofield; superintendent Primary department, Mrs. J. M. Tier; superintendent Beginners' department, Mrs. H. E. Gayle; superintendent Home department, Mrs. Charles E. Ball; secretary Home department, Mrs. Louis M. Dunavan.

Executive committee—William F Oliver, chairman; Miss Mabel Wilson, J. P. Laire. Library committee—Robert A. Meeker, chairman; H. F. Crawford, Mrs. Frank Storr. Music committee—Miss Lillian A. Force, chairman; Miss M. A. Randolph, Miss Hazel Martin, Miss Mabel Gano, Elmer P. Wheeler, H. J. Martin, Sr. Teachers' committee—Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, chairman; George L. Van Emburgh, Miss Mabel Wilson. Sunday-school Athletic Association committee—Robert A. Meeker, Clarence Rittenhouse, Chauncey F. Colthar.

Anchor Lodge Elects Officers.

The following officers were elected at last night's meeting of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M.: Worshipful master, William Taylor; senior warden, James Dodd; junior warden, E. E. Iremonger; senior deacon, A. J. Hambley; junior deacon, Robert E. Hall; senior master of ceremonies, H. Maxim; junior master of ceremonies, W. W. Wheelen; senior steward, W. H. Olmstead; junior steward, James Ferguson; chaplain, Rev. E. M. Rodman, Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss and Rev. A. E. Finn; secretary, S. B. Joseph; treasurer, J. Stephen Higham; trustees, O. T. Waring, Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman and Frank Wynkoop; representative to Masonic Hall Association, J. T. Sutphen.

Home from Jamestown.

Joseph Connors, a former Plainfielder now living in Brooklyn, arrived in the city last night to spend a short time with his parents after having been at the Jamestown Exposition for the past seven months. He was in charge of a government exhibit showing the modern method of concellation in the first and second class postoffices. The machines are made by a concern with which Mr. Connors has been connected for several years.

Fields—Tobias.

Miss Hannah E. Fields and William G. Tobias, colored, both of this city, were married Saturday night at the home of the bride's mother, 628 West Fourth street, by Rev. J. T. Diggs, pastor of Mt. Zion A. M. E. church. Charles H. Williams was best man, and Miss V. M. Waters was maid of honor. There were guests from New York, Brooklyn and this city.

Election at Bachelor's Club.

The Bachelor Club, of Somerville, has elected the following officers: President, Thomas G. Winson; vice-president, Joseph F. Lake; secretary, Guy Bergen; treasurer, G. D. McMurtry, and chamberlain, C. A. Speer.

Clifford A. Braider, of East Front street, who has been detained at home by illness, is much improved and hopes to be able to return to business soon.

WORK AMONG THE POOR

Lawrence Veiller, Former Tenement House Commissioner, Speaks.

MR. HUGH FOX ALSO SPEAKS.

Work Among New York and Chicago Poor Summarized Before Men's Club of Crescent Avenue Church.

Discussing the conditions among the metropolitan poor and what is being done to improve the conditions among the lower classes in all large cities, Lawrence Veiller gave an interesting informal talk before the Men's Club of the Crescent Avenue church in the church parlors last night. The speaker was formerly Deputy Tenement House Commissioner of New York city and has lately been a director of the department for the improvement of social conditions of the charity organization society.

Speaking of the situation existing among the poor, Mr. Veiller said that poverty, like consumption, can be cured, and that the cure is the same as for the great white plague—good environment, and plenty of light and fresh air. The department for the improvement of social conditions among the poor has done great work in an industrial way among the poor, especially of New York city and Chicago.

The department, the speaker said, is especially active in the work it is doing among the women and girls. A model tenement, such as most of the poorer class have for homes, has been secured, and here the girls are taught housework and cooking. This branch of the work is especially successful, as it is necessary to teach these girls, who spend most of their time working in shops and stores, something about the care of a home and the duties of a housekeeper and mother.

Speaking of the various playgrounds which have been secured by the department for the poorer classes, Mr. Veiller said that the essence of value of the playground does not lie in the getting of the place, as so many think, but the department does its best work in arranging what shall be done there. These playgrounds, he said, furnish a new form of education to the metropolitan poor, young and old. In Chicago these playgrounds are most complete, and here there is a national school park system in connection with the public schools. The parks are situated in the crowded tenement house districts and in them are large "field houses," where entertainments and dances may be held by the people of the neighborhood and refreshments may be purchased. The only restriction is that no religious or political meetings shall be held in these places. On the play grounds there are outdoor swimming pools and gymnasiums for the boys and girls, wading pools for younger children and in the winter skating and tobogganing on the flooded grounds draw the grown people as well as the children of the neighborhood. Athletic contests are held in these parks and in New York as well as in Chicago there is a regularly organized public school athletic league. The advantages of this play education, the speaker pointed out, are that the boys get the spirit of competition and clean sport and raise the general athletic standard.

Mr. Veiller next spoke of the work of the department in improving the labor conditions for women and children. He said that aside from the activity in the child labor campaign, there is a crusade being started against long hours for working women, many of whom work twelve to seventeen hours a day in factories and stores. The speaker pointed out the terrible effect of such long hours on the health of the women—mothers of future generations, and said that the work of the Consumers' League, which urges the people to patronize the stores and use only the products of those companies who are on the "white list," where the employes are treated right, have short hours and the best conditions of treatment.

A new feature of this work is the appointment of medical inspectors for factories and large stores. The speaker said that there were fifteen such inspectors at work in Massachusetts and that one had recently been appointed in New York city. These officials conduct regular examinations of the employes and study the question of hygiene and sanitation in the workshops.

In speaking of the liquor problem among the poor, Mr. Veiller said that the drink habit is not the read cause of poverty, but the conditions are caused by sickness and industrial displacement. The department is conducting a campaign against the "Raines Law Hotels" in New York city, nests of moral squalor, and in this work Hugh Fox, of this city,

'MORE HASTE, LESS SPEED' APPLIES TO STREET PAVE

"More haste the less speed," an old saying, is being exemplified today in the street pavement work. Most of the brick laid a few days ago between the westbound trolley tracks on West Front street was taken up this morning to be relaid, owing to the fact that they were laid before the concrete foundation became thoroughly hardened and in a number of places the brick has dropped between an eighth and half an inch and being noticeable to the eye.

This trouble is due to the anxiety of the street officials to get that part of the street closed up before another bad storm should tie up the work indefinitely. The concrete is now hardened and after the brick is relaid is not expected to give any further trouble. Today the brick paving is being finished on Watchung avenue.

WANT PEDDIE INSTITUTE TO BE A BOYS' SCHOOL.

Since the financial trouble developed in connection with the management of Peddie Institute, at Hightstown, efforts have been made to create a sentiment in favor of making the school one for boys only and not continuing it a co-educational institution. There has been great opposition to this plan and a meeting of the board of trustees was called for yesterday at Trenton to consider the proposition.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Buchanan, of Duer street, is one of the incorporators of the institution and together with several others, opposes the plan to make it an institution for boys only. His plea in behalf of the co-educational idea is based on the fact that it has been a success for many years and he believes that the young women of the Baptist denomination of the State should have equal educational advantages with the young men. It is not thought likely that a change will be made owing to the strong opposition on the part of Baptists throughout the State. Such a change would rob hundreds of women in and out of the State of their alma mater, something that has aroused the greatest interest on their part.

Pleasing Musical.

The first of a series of musicals, which will be given this winter, took place last Saturday evening at the residence of Miss F. May Grant, 320 East Seventh street. Two of her promising pupils are Aaron and Leo Hirsch, of Watchung avenue, who rendered duets as well as piano solos in a pleasing manner. Miss Ethel Vail, of Elmwood place, also rendered solos, one of which being "Polish Dance," by Scharwenka. She played in a brilliant style. During the evening Miss Helen Wooley pleased the audience with her entertaining selections.

Planning for Next Year.

The discussion of next year's program was the feature of yesterday's meeting of the Monday Afternoon Club at the Casino. Much interest was manifested and the discussion was animated. The results will be formulated later by the executive committee. Mrs. Henry M. Maxson, president of the club, and Mrs. Gates Willard, a vice-president, who were delegates to the Pure Food conference, held at Cranford December 3, gave interesting reports of the conference.

Miss Waring to be Introduced.

A social event of the early part of the New Year will be the formal introduction to society of Miss Eleanor Waring, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Waring, of Park avenue. The affair will take place at the Casino on January 3, and will be an elaborate one. The invitation list will be large and will include many socially prominent in the younger set, both here and in New York.

Date for Stryker-Hyde Nuptials.

Invitations have been issued to the wedding of Miss Stryker, daughter of the late Adjutant-General Stryker, of Trenton, and Charles L. Hyde, of this city. The event will be celebrated at the home of the bride's mother in Trenton Saturday afternoon, December 28, at 12:30 o'clock. It is expected that a large number of guests will attend from this city and New York.

Horse Thieves at Old Bridge.

The local police were notified by telephone this morning to be on the lookout for two men who had stolen a horse at Old Bridge, last night, and who were seen proceeding toward this city. The animal is described as a bay stallion with a white star on the forehead and two white hind feet. It belongs to John H. Thompson, of Old Bridge.

Illness Postpones Wedding.

The wedding of Miss Ethelwyn Hoyt to Dr. Frank C. Ard has been postponed on account of the serious illness of Miss Hoyt's mother and the consequent physical breakdown of Miss Hoyt.

MEN'S CLUB PLANS LOCAL OPTION FIGHT

The regular monthly meeting of the Men's Club of the Congregational church was held last night in the church parlors. In the absence of the president, Dr. Frank Clawson, Sidney Dunning presided. Reports from the meeting of the federation of Men's Clubs, which was recently organized at Newark, were given by A. C. La Boyteaux, Sidney Dunning and J. A. Powilson. The latter has been elected one of the vice-presidents of the federation and has been given charge of the promotion of the social features of the Men's Clubs throughout the State.

The pastor, Rev. C. L. Goodrich, strongly urged the members of the club to work for local option. He spoke of New Jersey's backward position on the excise question and said that the men of the churches should band together to overthrow the liquor traffic.

Alexander Millar was appointed chairman of a committee to provide speakers and arrange for a meeting to awaken interest in local option and to support the bill which will be introduced into the Legislature.

The business meeting was followed by a social hour. The entertainment consisted of humorous songs and impersonations by the Chapman brothers, of New York. Refreshments were served by a committee of which Warren Weseman was chairman. Four new members were elected.

BUSINESS MEN'S FIVE LEADS Y.M.C.A. LEAGUE

The business men's five of the Y. M. C. A. won first place in the local basketball league, last night, by taking a game from the Leaders' team by a score of 30-29. The winning team were given eleven points handicap by their opponents in accordance with the rules of the league, and though the Leaders easily caught up, the business men played fast basketball and the score see-sawed all through the second half. The game was won in the last few seconds of play, when Smith broke away from his man and shot a basket. The whistle blew for time as the ball fell through the net. For the business men, Listman, who took Doane's place in the second half, and Stevens did the best work, while Thompson and Hoagland excelled for the Leaders.

The teams lined up as follows: Business Men—Doane and Listman, right; Smith, left forward; Doane, Listman, right forward; Dunning, centre; Jarvis, left guard; Stevens, right guard. Leaders—Line, left forward; Thompson, right forward; Collins, centre; Hoagland, left guard; Vail, right guard.

As the result of the games played so far in the league, the Business Men are in the lead, with two victories out of two games played. The Seniors have won their only game played; the Leaders have won one and lost one; the First Baptists have lost their only game played, and the Congregational team have lost both their games.

"Cow Puncher" Told Experiences.

W. Wellington Massee, an ex-cowboy from the Southwest, was at the Y. M. C. A. last night and gave an informal talk on his experiences as "cow puncher" on the western plains. The lecture was under the auspices of the boys' department of the association, and there were about a hundred boys present. This is the first of a series of six talks being arranged for the boys' department by Boys' Secretary L. A. Soule.

Dinner to J. Henry Storrs.

Justice Henry Storrs, of Kensington avenue, will be given a complimentary dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, Friday night, in recognition of the completion of his fifty years service in the comptroller's office, New York, where he occupies the position of chief clerk. He is recognized as being one of the best informed men concerning New York's finances now in the service of that municipality.

Local Man at the Big Race.

George E. Firstbrook, of Grant avenue, is one of the score keepers serving at the six day race in Madison Square Garden, this week. Mr. Firstbrook has been at the garden since the starting pistol was fired and takes his off hours in the training quarters, incidentally finding time to get "dope" from the riders for the Newark News sporting page.

School Pins at N. P. H. S.

The new North Plainfield High School pins have arrived and have been distributed among the boys and girls at the Somerset street school. The pin is a neat flag design in red and black enamel, bearing the letters N. P. H. S. George Parsons is chairman of the committee in charge of securing the pins.

HONOR DEFEATED NOMINEE

Union Co. Democrats Gather at Banquet in Katzenbach's Honor.

MARTINE MAKES A SPEECH.

Tumulty, Wright, Lethbridge, Silzer and Curtis As Well As Egenolf On the Program—At Elizabeth.

Men prominent in the Democratic ranks from all parts of the State, assembled in the Democratic headquarters at Elizabeth, last night, to do honor to Frank S. Katzenbach, the defeated candidate for Governor. The affair was in the nature of a testimonial dinner tendered by Colonel Dennis F. Collins, chairman of the Union County Democratic committee, and the gathering numbered in all about 300.

Seated beside Mr. Katzenbach at the banquet table were James E. Martine, of this city, against whom the defeated candidate won in the contest for the nomination; Robert S. Hudspeth, chairman of the Democratic State committee; Assemblyman Joseph P. Tumulty, of Jersey City; Edgar E. Lethbridge, speaker of the Assembly; Assemblyman Wright, of Newark; Charles H. Gallagher and John P. Dullard, of Trenton; Senator George S. Silzer, of New Brunswick; William J. Curtis, of Summit, and Assemblyman Joseph E. Stricker, of Perth Amboy.

From the spirit that prevailed during the evening it seemed to be anything but the aftermath of an unsuccessful campaign and the addresses were all in an optimistic vein. The defeated candidate spoke cheerfully of the Democratic outlook and thanked the Union county men for their loyal aid in the recent fight. He declared that Union did more than any other Republican county to turn the tide of election.

Mr. Martine also made a characteristic address and the announcement of his name evoked continued applause. Other speakers were Col. Collins, who arranged the banquet; Assemblyman Stricker, Charles Gallagher, who is chairman of the Mercer county committee; Mayor P. J. Ryan, of Elizabeth; Assemblyman Wright and City Attorney James Connolly, of Elizabeth.

At a business session of the county committee, held previous to the dinner, it was stated that the net receipts from the outing last summer were $700 and that there is a balance in the treasury. The date of the primary election for State committeemen was set for December 20. Peter Egenolf was not present at the dinner.

J. V. E. VANDERHOEF GIVEN GOLD MEDAL

Delegations of prominent Heptasophs from all parts of the State gathered in Elizabeth, last night, at a dinner tendered J. V. E. Vanderhoef, of this city, when he was presented with a handsome gold badge in recognition of his ten years' services as district deputy supreme archon.

The presentation speech was made by John Nixon, of Orange, who paid deserving tribute to the esteem and worth in which Mr. Vanderhoef is held by the members of the order. Addresses were also made by the Rev. Dr. E. B. Cobb, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church, of Elizabeth; W. T. Bingham, deputy supreme chief ranger and State organizer of the Independent Order Foresters; F. A. McKenzey, high secretary of the Independent Order Foresters; V. W. Nash, Sr., past grand master of the A. O. U. W., and secretary of the Heptasophs of this city and other members of the order.

Other members of Protective Conclave, of this city, present were R. H. Barnhard, F. A. Weber, F. E. Quipp and A. H. Vanderhoef. Mr. Vanderhoef has recently been appointed a member of one of the supreme committees by the supreme archon and is recognized by all who know him as one of the most able men in the order.

Handshakes for Martin.

Fireman Martin Connaughton, who is stationed at headquarters, is receiving congratulations over the arrival of a son at his home on West Third street. The young fireman was born yesterday morning, a short time after a similar event had been chronicled at the home of Mr. Connaughton's brother-in-law, James Cuniff, of West Fifth street.

Democratic County Committeeman Walter C. Linbarger, of Somerset street, is ill with pneumonia.

Mr. and Mrs. Melle Hylkema, of Arlington avenue, are the parents of a young son who came to their home last night.

HUMAN STOMACH HAS BECOME DEGENERATE

Animals Are Healthier Because of Strong Digestive Apparatus.

An interesting interview was recently obtained with L. T. Cooper, the young man whose theory and medicines have created such a sensation during the past year.

Mr. Cooper, in speaking of the remarkable success of his medicine, had this to say on the subject: "My medicine regulates the stomach. That is why it is successful. The human stomach today has become degenerate, and is the cause for most ill health. In the horse, the dog, and the wild animals generally, you see no nerve exhaustion, no chronic debility. They are not shut up day after day with practically no exercise, and they are not able to stuff themselves with food when their bodies have not had enough work to justify it. The human race has been doing this for years, and look at the result—half the people are complaining of poor health, not real illness—just a half-sick, tired, droopy feeling. They don't really know what is the matter with them.

"I know that all the trouble is caused by weak, overworked stomachs. I have proved this with my medicine to many thousands of people in most of the leading cities of this country. I expect to do the same thing in Europe next year. This is the real reason for the demand for my preparation."

Among those who have recently been converted to Cooper's theory is Mr. Monroe Brown of 8 Hancock Street, Winchester, Mass. Mr. Brown has this to say of his experience with the new medicine: "For over seven years I suffered with catarrh of the stomach, and for the past year I was lame with rheumatism. I attributed this to my stomach trouble, as my circulation was very poor. What food I ate would turn to gas almost at once. I would have a sensation of bloating, and would have to belch frequently to relieve this. My heart also became affected, and I would suddenly become dizzy and have palpitations. I was tired and dull and despondent at all times. I lost a great deal of flesh, and was nervous and depressed. This went on for over seven years, although I spent hundreds of dollars trying to get relief.

"When Cooper was in Boston I heard a good deal about his ideas on stomach trouble. Next, one or two friends told me that his medicines had greatly helped them. I purchased some of the New Discovery medicine. Today I am perfectly well; I sleep like a boy, can eat anything and have no rheumatism or heart trouble. I no longer have any gas on my stomach, and feel as I did years ago. No one could be more astonished by these facts than myself. They are remarkable, but true. This is indeed a wonderful medicine."

The Cooper preparations have been more widely sold and discussed since being introduced than anything of the kind ever before sold by druggists. We sell them and explain their nature. —T. S. Armstrong.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

GOLF.

Fourteen open handicaps were held at the Metropolitan Golf Association tournaments this season. In four the best net was exactly the par, at three the net was within a stroke of par and at one within two strokes of it, a result to reflect credit on the handicappers, Leighton Calkins, F. J. Phillips and F. S. Douglas, and on the club secretaries who have cooperated with them. Only at Deal and at the New York golf tournament at Van Cortlandt were the net scores below par. At four tournaments the net scores were above par, the weather conditions being against accurate play.

Regarding Van Cortlandt the handicappers state in their report that the first and second net men, Gaines and Conley, were on the printed handicap list and the committee is not responsible for their low returns. Both played "better than they knew how" and greatly surprised their local club handicappers. At Deal the only rated M. G. A. player who finished below par was N. W. Anthony. The handicappers assume the responsibility in his case, but in pleading guilty they point out Anthony had a club rating of 11, which the committee cut to 9 before the list was printed.

In the Plainfield tournament the best net tied the par of 70 and the next four net scores were only a stroke higher. Twenty-three net scores were under 80 and thirty-three more under 85, which is the record for close finishes in an eighteen hole handicap.

Regarding the limitation of the printed handicap list to players not over a 9 rating, tried this season for the first time, the handicap committee believes the saving in expense and in the labor of tabulation has justified the action, while providing a reliable and easy way of enabling club officials to get a good line on all players in the district whose names are not printed. As it is much easier to rate low men equitably and safely than high men, the committee recommends the short handicap list as a permanency. The short list is meant to be used by clubs as far as it goes, and when a club gives a tournament it is expected to print on its circular a condition for the handicap event, requiring any entrant not named on the association's handicap list to present a letter from his club stating how many strokes he gets at his home club from some player who is named on the printed list.

FOOTBALL.

Joshua Crane, Jr., head coach of the Harvard football team, is of the opinion that the forward pass has come to stay, and declares that it has been one of the best and most spectacular features of the new game. In speaking on the subject last night Mr. Crane said: "Walter Camp is certainly correct in his statement that it gives a poorer team a chance of winning, but what is the harm in letting the poorer team have a little show for victory? The forward pass has worked well for the last two seasons, and the men have developed excellent methods of passing. It has opened the game and made it more lashing and of more interest. It has added to the brilliancy of the play and has wonderfully developed team work when properly used.

"For one, I can see not one real argument against its continued use. I am for it first, last and all the time. With the forward pass properly developed, and the open style of play that it is bound to bring, developed as it will be, I can see nothing but the abolition of all of the obstacles to a perfect game. Before asking that the forward pass be done away with, its critics should remember that it has been used only two years, and that its effectiveness has hardly been shown. It ought at least to get a fair trial, and that it cannot have in two years."

For the first time in two years a football game will be played at Columbia this afternoon, when the sophomores and freshmen will line up for the under class championship. For several weeks, or ever since the ban was lifted, about fifty men have been practising daily on South Field in preparation for today's contest. G. L. Helmrich and P. W. VonSultza, both of whom played on Columbia's last 'varsity team, have been coaching the class teams.

Not satisfied with the restoration of intramural football, the class of '07 has petitioned President Butler to allow Columbia to participate to a limited extent in the revised game of intercollegiate football and to sanction a limited schedule of intercollegiate games in the autumn of 1908. No response has yet been made to this petition, but it seems extremely unlikely that the requests will be granted.

Francis Hardon Burr, of the class of '09, was elected captain of the Harvard football eleven for next year at a meeting of the 'varsity players last night. The election was by acclamation and was well received by the undergraduates. Burr played at guard and did most of the punting in 1906, when he earned a place on the All-American team. This year he was moved to tackle and played a steady, consistent game throughout the season.

The Cornell association football team will make a tour of South America next June and July, if final arrangements can be made. At a meeting of the soccer association the challenge of the Paulista Association Football League, of Brazil, was accepted subject to a guarantee of $220 for each member of the team as expenses.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Witter, of Oneida, N. Y., are visiting their daughter, Mrs. Marcus L. Clawson, of Park avenue.

Plainfield People Give Credit Where Credit Is Due.

People of Plainfield who suffer with sick kidneys and bad backs want a kidney remedy that can be depended upon. The best is Doan's Kidney Pills, a medicine for the kidneys only, made from pure roots and herbs, and the only one that is backed by cures in Plainfield. Here's Plainfield testimony:

Adolph Thomas, machinist, living at 206 Spooner avenue, Plainfield, N. J., says: "I have had for several years considerable trouble from a most severe form of rheumatism. Having heard that Doan's Kidney Pills were good for rheumatic troubles arising from the kidneys I got a supply at Randolph's drug store and began using them. I have taken in all three boxes of this remedy and must say that they have acted like a charm in my case. Not only have I been relieved of the pains that troubled me, but my kidneys have been strengthened."

THE FORUM.

Sensible School Suggestion.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:

While the city is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars for education, would it not be well to consider the needs of the outlying districts where hundreds of small children are unable to attend school in stormy weather, owing to the distance. Even the new $110,000 school to be erected at Essex street and Darrow avenue will be more than a mile from hundreds of little children living west of Clinton avenue. Could not temporary buildings costing less than $5,000 be erected for primary and kindergarten classes at convenient points, say Clinton avenue and West Third street, and one in the Netherwood district.

When the city got through with them the buildings could be sold at a profit to be converted into a store or dwelling; or if the city saw the need of such a movement real estate operators would be ready to build and rent to the city suitable buildings. Are not the little ones entitled to consideration?"

His 100th Christmas.

At his homestead, in Mountainside, Jacob Hamilton, said to be the oldest in Union county, expects to eat his 100th Christmas dinner. Mr. Hamilton was born near Baltusrol Hill, on November 7, 1808. His ancestors settled in Elizabethtown in 1748. His wife, who died more than thirty years ago, was Miss Elizabeth Abernathy, whose ancestors were among the early settlers of Elizabethtown. Mr. Hamilton's only child, Jacob Henry Hamilton, born March 11, 1851, lives with his father at the old Mountainside homestead. For more than half a century Mr. Hamilton has been farming.

has been especially active. Concluding his remarks, Mr. Vieller urged the members of the club to keep constantly in touch with the conditions in the large cities, especially Newark and New York, and said that better work could be done in this way than by conducting periodic investigations.

After Mr. Vieller's talk, Hugh F. Fox, of Central avenue, who has been active in the work of improving social conditions for some time past, made a few remarks. He spoke of the detrimental effects of the trade in opium and cocaine, which seems to be on the increase in New Jersey, especially in New York, and said that an effort was being made to introduce a bill into the State Legislature to prevent this traffic. He spoke also of the neglect among the poor to follow the advice of the medical inspectors and said that an effort was being made to prevent this "constructive cruelty" by law. He concluded by summarizing the good work of the society in the campaign against tuberculosis in New Jersey.

At the conclusion of the talk, the members spent a social hour and refreshments were served. Mr. Veiller, who was introduced by President Kimball, of the Club, suggested other talks on similar work before the organization, and it is possible that arrangements for other speakers active in bettering the conditions among the poor will be made by the club.

HASTY DIVORCES SOON TO BE CURBED BY LAW.

The days of hasty divorces, followed by early re-marriages, are probably about at an end in New Jersey. Beginning with the first of next month, the new law governing divorces, which was based upon the recommendations of the uniform divorce law congress, will take effect.

Under this law litigants in contested divorce cases must wait for six months after the court has reached its decision before the final decree of divorce is granted, and parties in uncontested cases must wait a like period after the filing of the master's report.

There is now a rule of the Court of Chancery that in uncontested cases the testimony must be kept on file in the clerk's office for thirty days before the decree is issued, so that reports in all such cases filed since the first of this month will be held until the first of January, when the new law will be operative, and a total period of between six and seven months will have elapsed before the absolute decrees are signed. It is probable that the chancellor will abolish the present thirty-day rule when the new law becomes operative, as the purpose of the delay is fully covered by that act.

In contested cases, under the law now in force, divorced parties in a suit are at liberty to remarry at once, unless an appeal has been taken before the filing of the final decree. Under the new practise a decree nisi, or intermediate decree, will first be entered to remain in force until the expiration of the six months, when the decree will be made absolute. The decree nisi will be applicable to both contested and non-contested cases.

HOW THE MOON LOOKS.

Queer Variance In Impressions As to the Same Object.

I asked my men to compare the size of the full moon to that of some object held in the hand at arm's length. I explained the question carefully and said that they were to describe an object just large enough when seen at arm's length to cover the whole moon. My list of answers begins as follows: Quarter of a dollar, fair sized cantaloupe; at the horizon, large dinner plate; overhead, dessert plate; my watch, six inches in diameter, silver dollar, hundred times as large as my watch, man's head, fifty cent piece, nine inches in diameter, grape fruit, carriage wheel, butter plate, orange, ten feet, two inches, one cent piece, schoolroom clock, a pea, soup plate, fountain pen, lemon pie, palm of the hand, three feet in diameter—enough to show again the overwhelming manifoldness of the impressions received.

To the surprise of my readers perhaps it may be added at once that the only man who was right was the one who compared it to a pea. It is most probable that the results would not have been different if I had asked the question on a moonlight night with the full moon overhead. The substitution of the memory image for the immediate perception can hardly have impaired the correctness of the judgments. If in any court the size of a distant object were to be given by witnesses, and one man declared it as large as a pea and the second as large as a lemon pie and the third ten feet in diameter it would hardly be fair to form an objective judgment till the psychologist had found out what kind of a mind was producing that estimate.—Professor Hugo Munsterberg in McClure's.

THE BIG STORE IN HOLIDAY ATTIRE

No matter in which direction you turn you are sure to find some suggestion for a gift. Begin your Christmas buying now, don't wait till the last few days with its hustle, bustle and confusion, then again you will secure more satisfactory purchases before the stocks are depleted.

SOME HOLIDAY SUGGESTIONS

XMAS UMBRELLAS

It needs only a glimpse to show that we have the umbrella stocks of Plainfield. Umbrellas for men, women and children, in plain and fancy handles, from 79c to $10.-50.

Glove and Handkerchief Boxes

Make an ideal gift for most any one; handsomely embossed lacqured Japanese goods; two special lots that we are selling at 39c and 59c each. Others from 75c to $1.98.

Blankets and Comfortables

Make very sensible and desirable Xmas gifts, and we never had such a stock of good qualities and at such low prices. We had the good fortune to secure them before the advance in prices.

The Celebrated Muncy Mills Blankets, ranging in price from $3.50 to $15.00 a pair.

The famous Corkran Brothers' Comfortables, absolutely clean and sanitary, very fluffy and light, from $1.50 to $7.98 each.

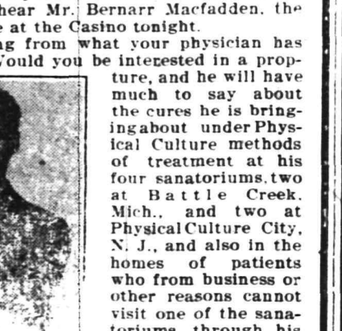
A Bissell Carpet Sweeper

Is just the thing; a useful and serviceable article and one that will last for years, and they are very inexpensive; $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 and $3.50 each.

Dolls! Dolls!!

The most beautiful French dolls you've ever seen, just as natural as life; we direct special attention to those at 98c, $1.50 and $1.98; others from 25c up.

Demorest Sewing Machines



What could be more acceptable for a Christmas gift than a good sewing machine; join our club, it costs only a dollar and it permits you to pay for the machine on easy monthly payments, and enables you to buy

A $30.00 Machine for $19.50
A $35.00 Machine for $21.50
A $40.00 Machine for $22.50
A $50.00 Machine for $25.00

These prices include a full set of attachments and a 10-year guarantee on the machine; make your selection now and we will hold and deliver it at Christmas time.

FOR MEN

Neckwear, Suspenders, in fancy boxes, bath robes and house jackets, dress suit cases and bags, collars and cuffs, night shirts and pajamas, silk handkerchiefs and mufflers, plain and initial handkerchiefs, kid gloves, driving and auto gloves, etc.

Sale of Vases at Half-Price

Importer's samples of such well known ware as Royal Warwick, Chelsea, Ameresque and Carlstadt, very artistic shapes and just the thing for gifts; prices ranging from 98c up to $9.50.

Framed Pictures

Make very desirable gifts. We've an elegant line to choose from, water colors, etchings, pastels, lithographs, photo colors, etc., etc., at 39c, 50c, 69c, 98c, $1.50 and $1.98.

Handkerchiefs for Xmas

We did an immense holiday business in handkerchiefs last year and this season we expect to eclipse those records. The showing includes handkerchiefs from the best Belfast, St. Gall and American manufacturers, which you will find marked at the very lowest prices.

Furniture for Xmas

Many persons would appreciate a piece of furniture instead of some fancy article. We suggest the following: Parlor and Library Tables, Jardiniere Stands, Morris Chairs, Parlor Rockers, Book Cases, Writing Desks, Music Cabinets, Buffets, Couches and Bamboo Furniture.

The Woodhull & Martin Store.

DOES THIS MEAN YOU?

Are you going through life, half-well, half sick? Do you feel all tired out by noon? Is it an effort to arise in the morning, and do you feel almost as tired then as when you went to bed? Do you? If you do, you owe it to yourself to hear Mr. Bernarr Macfadden, the celebrated Physical Culturist, lecture at the Casino tonight.

Are you an invalid, or suffering from what your physician has told you is an incurable disease? Would you be interested in a proposition of a guaranteed cure in your case, or no charge? If so, call on Mr. Macfadden at his hotel while he is in the city, or better yet, write him at his main office, Flat Iron Building, New York, and by all means hear him lecture.

Mr. E. J. Jensen.

While Mr. Macfadden has taken for the subject of his lecture "PRUDERY and DEGENERACY," it all comes under the head of Physical Culturist, a glowing photograph is that of Mr. E. J. Jensen, of Sioux City, S. D., who came to one of Mr. Macfadden's sanatoriums suffering from nervous depletion. Mr. Jensen is a telegraph operator by profession. When he first began treatment he was suffering from what is ordinarily known as a "nervous breakdown"—he "felt tired" all the time. Local physicians and nerve specialists had been unable to bring about any improvement in his condition; on the contrary, he was slowly but surely growing worse. The photograph shows Mr. Jensen after he had been at the sanatorium less than two months. At the time the photograph was taken he had gained seven pounds of solid muscle, his strength had doubled and nearly every symptom of his disease had been eradicated. Before Mr. Jensen left the sanatorium he was completely cured and his face was even more full and rounded than shown in the photograph, and he was once more in perfect health.

It will probably seem to the ordinary reader that it is impossible for a man not in the medical profession to succeed in curing what are commonly known as "incurable diseases," diseases which the medical profession have always failed to cure. This without the use of any drugs and simply by means of first getting the person's daily routine of life right and then letting nature work out its own cure. Mr. Macfadden does not perform miracles, but simply brings about his cures by means of proper diet, right living and, in some cases, light gymnasium exercises. No wonder the average reader is skeptical. The public has been bamboozled so long by medical quacks and fake patent medicines that they do not know what to believe and what not to believe. To overcome that, Mr. Macfadden offers to guarantee a cure in each and every case, and if a satisfactory change in the condition of the patient is not brought about in a reasonable length of time, he presents the patient with a receipted bill in full for treatment, board and lodging.

THE JOKE WAS ON HER.

Comparison Made by Woman Lawyer Left Opening for Opponent.

A woman member of the bar in New York gives the following correspondence with the reservation that no names shall be quoted: "I am one of the few women," she says, "who can see a joke even if aimed at myself. I do not feel that in this case I came off the best." The letter was from a man lawyer and was as follows: "Dear Miss Blank: We agree to the compromise as promised in your favor of this date. Not because your client has a just right to such settlement, but from the fact that we do not care to open a contest with a woman lawyer." To which the reply was sent: "Gentlemen: I note yours agreeing to a settlement, although I cannot congratulate you on your gallantry in begging the question. Like the original Adam, you seem inclined to hide behind a woman's petticoat." And the following letter closed the correspondence: "Dear Miss Blank: If you will turn to the early pages of Genesis you will discover that Eve did not wear a petticoat."

With Thanks.

John Budd was a most sedate, precise and altogether exemplary young man. When he wooed and won Susan Smiley, the belle of the village, everybody rejoiced at John's good fortune. However, he bore his triumph with modesty and decorum until the day of the wedding. Then, for one awful moment, his air of aplomb failed him. When the officiating clergyman asked, "Will you, John, take this woman to be thy wedded wife?" John responded, blushingly, "Yes, please."—Harper's Weekly.

NEWS IN THE SUBURBS.

PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

Fanwood Council, R. A., held a well attended meeting last night in the Library rooms. Considerable business of a routine nature was transacted, after which the annual election of officers was held. Supervising District Deputy Barr, of Jersey City, was present. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Past regent, W. H. Carter; regent, M. C. Stewart; vice-regent, Frederick Boe, orator, Harry Werner; chaplain, W. R. Buckley; guide, W. S. Cory; warden, Samuel Holdsworth; sentry, James B. Guttridge; secretary, Edward L. Hand; collector, W. B. Noble; treasurer, John Bornmann.

The trouble of Theodore Glazier and the residents of Alton, which has kept that end of the township in a state of excitement periodically for several years past, is still to be continued. Vice Chancellor Edwin R. Walker adjourned the hearing on the injunction secured for three weeks.

The weekly rehearsal for the Christmas exercises at the Baptist church, which was to have been held in the church tonight, will be omitted this week.

The public school pupils will enjoy a holiday vacation of nearly two weeks, school closing on the afternoon of December 24.

Edward Heath has resigned his position with Lynus Walpole to accept another in Westfield.

Only one session of the school was held yesterday on account of the storm.

Charles J. Silvers.

Charles J. Silvers, a son of the late Randolph O. Silvers, of this city, died at his home in Elizabeth on Monday after a brief illness from heart disease. Mr. Silvers was born at Scotch Plains. In his youth he had the benefit of a training in the United States navy. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1879 and conducted business in Newark from that time until his death. He was a member of the Lawyers' Club of Newark and took an active interest in the civic affairs of Elizabeth, at one time being president of the South End Improvement Association. He is survived by a wife who was Miss Louise Belcher.

Harry Kelly Returning.

Manager Counihan has secured Joseph M. Gaites' big production of "His Honor, the Mayor," for appearance at the New Plainfield theatre, Saturday, December 21. Harry Kelly, who made one of the biggest hits of any comedian appearing in Plainfield, will be seen at the head of the company in his familiar role of "Deacon Flood." The show has been appearing in this vicinity for the past few weeks to crowded houses.

Joe Tumuli Severely Burned.

In extinguishing a fire which threatened his home at the Conshee house on Pearl street, Monday, Joe Tumuli, the Somerset street barber, received severe burns on his right hand in taking down a stove pipe full of buring soot, which threatened to fall. The fire started in the kitchen, but was extinguished by Tumuli before any damage was done. No alarm was given.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Demarest.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Demarest, widow of David M. Demarest, formerly of this city, died at Geneva, N. Y., yesterday. She was the step-mother of Henry Demarest, of Park avenue. Announcement of funeral arrangements will be made tomorrow. Interment will be made here.

SEWER COMMITTEE FINISHES ASSESSMENTS AT WESTFIELD.

The Westfield sewer committee, of which James E. Martine is a member, finished its business of assessment on the Westfield trunk sewer at the town hall, Westfield, yesterday afternoon, and turned in the report to Judge Swazey. The assessment completed, the members of the committee sat yesterday afternoon to receive complaints on the assessed values on which they have been busy for some time past, but there were few "kickers."

The committee, the other members of which are Judge J. William Crane, of Elizabeth, and ex-County Clerk William H. Howard, of Rahway, was appointed to assess the balance of the cost of the big trunk line sewer in the outlying districts of the town. The trunk line system has been in operation at Westfield for the past twelve years, but at the time of its installation, some of the land was mere farm land, deriving no advantage from the system. This locality has been opened up, streets have been cut through and houses built has now been assessed. The assessed valuation of this territory aggregates about $7,000. There is still some unimproved property which is not assessed, consisting largely of unimproved farm lands.

Rev. E. J. Knight Honored.

Rev. Edward J. Knight, rector of Christ P. E. church, Trenton, and bishop-elect of the missionary jurisdiction of Western Colorado, was honored yesterday when the Episcopal clericus of Trenton gave him a luncheon. The event was held in the Colonial room of the Trenton House and was attended by about eighteen Episcopal clergymen. Talks were given by Rev. Dr. W. Strother Jones, for the Trenton clergy; Rev. Dr. A. B. Baker, of Princeton, for the Trenton diocese; Rev. Ralph Urban, for the Associate mission, and Rev. Robert W. Trenbath, for the Christ P. E. church. Rev. Dr. John Scarborough, bishop of New Jersey, was present.

A Diabolical Law.

Vice-Chancellor Garrison Monday morning, in an argument with Chas. C. Black, at Jersey City, declared that the revision act of the Legislature, passed in 1900, and under which all condemnation proceedings in this State are taken, was a "diabolical act," and that it was drawn to benefit the railroads. The act was drawn, he said, by Charles L. Corbin, of Collins & Corbin.

Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, will meet tomorrow night and elect officers for the coming year.

AN ORDINANCE

ACCEPTING EXTENSION OF WATCHUNG AVENUE AS A PUBLIC STREET.

Be it ordained by the Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield.

1. That the extension of Watchung Avenue in the borough of North Plainfield from the present northwesterly end of Watchung Avenue as already opened northwesterly to the northwesterly boundary line of said borough, be and the same is hereby accepted as a public street as dedicated by the various owners of lands included in said extension, as shown on and by the map thereof dedicating the same for a public street signed by said land owners and now on file in the office of the clerk of Somerset County.

2. The center line of said extension, as shown by said map, begins at the point where the northwesterly end of the center line of Watchung Avenue as now opened, intersects the northwesterly line of lands owned by Lewis M. Coddington, and runs thence, as shown by said map, North forty-eight degrees and sixteen minutes west, eight hundred and seventeen and twenty-seven one hundredths feet more or less to a point in the Northwesterly side line of Jennings' Lane as now opened; thence North forty-seven degrees and fifty-five minutes west six hundred and sixty-eight and fifty-three one hundredths feet, more or less, to a point in the northwesterly boundary line of the borough of North Plainfield, which boundary line divides the borough of North Plainfield from the township of North Plainfield. Said extension of Watchung Avenue being dedicated and accepted sixty feet wide, thirty feet on each side of said center line; of which entire width thirty-six feet (eighteen on each side of said center line) is devoted to roadway, and the remaining twelve feet on each side of said roadway is devoted to sidewalks, all as shown on said map.

3. Said extension hereby accepted shall be considered as an extension of Watchung Avenue and shall be known and designated as "Watchung Avenue."

4. This ordinance shall take effect on the twentieth day of December, A. D. 1907.

Approved December sixth, 1907.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

What was wonderful a few years ago is now a matter of course. The electric light, telephone, trolley car, automobile—a thousand other inventions that are now so commonplace to us, would transfix our great grandfathers with amazement. The march of improvement today is more rapid than ever—so rapid that it is hardly possible to keep in touch with it, unless, through the medium of the most wonderful invention of all—the reproduction of the motion as well as the form of life. It is this marvelous medium that enables Lyman H. Howe to transport the million spectators that annually attend his exhibitions to all parts of the world. His new program, more than ever, is the only true equivalent of actual travel. So true to nature—to things as they are—to events as they happened—is Mr. Hoew's new program, that every spectator of it seems to go along with this experienced, enthusiastic globe-trotter, and enjoy the same delights of the journey (but without its discomforts), views the impressive scenes and curious places as if with his own eyes, and mingles with the motley throngs as if in person. The fruits of many months of labor and planning and of many years of experience are condensed in the program which will be shown at the New Plainfield theatre tomorrow night. It visualizes this great, big, fascinating world of ours, more clearly and strongly than any program Mr. Howe has hitherto exhibited. It abounds with beauty, instruction and entertainment more than any other exhibition of its kind at home or abroad.

So exacting and fatiguing is the role of Jessie, (The Little Mother) in "The Fatal Wedding," which will be the attraction at the New Plainfield theatre, Friday night, that Sullivan, Harris & Woods have engaged the services of two child artists, the Misses Montague, to interpret the part. Each of these very young women will alternate with the other at the various performances, thus giving each from four to five performances a week, instead of the usual nine. This character of "The Little Mother" is one that appeals instantly to every feminine heart, and to that fact may be ascribed much of the success of this remarkable melodrama.

Henry Miller will present "The Great Divide," the "long awaited 'great American play,'" at the New Plainfield theatre next Saturday afternoon and night. The coming of the famous drama, which was the attraction at the Princess and Daly's theatres in New York nearly 500 nights, has for some time been held by our play lovers as a bright spot in the indefinite theatrical future, and positive announcement of the date of the engagement will be greeted with pleasure. "The Great Divide" has added much to the celebrity of its leading players and brought from dramatic obscurity into permanent renown an author who will have to be reckoned with from now on in the American drama.

Al. H. Wilson, the ambassador of German dialect in "Metz in the Alps," a romantic comedy drama, described as a picturesque story of Sunny Switzerland, and for which Mr. Wilson has composed several new songs, will be the attraction at the New Plainfield theatre next Monday night.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

The Junior Endeavor Society of the Congregational church will hold a sociable in the church tomorrow afternoon.

The Young People's Association of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church will meet Friday night for mission study.

The fair held last week in the Stirling building for the benefit of the building fund of Faith chapel netted about $300.

The Sunday-school Christmas entertainment will be held at the Park Avenue Baptist church Monday night, December 30.

There will be Danish Lutheran services tonight in the W. C. T. U. rooms on Madison avenue at 8 o'clock. Rev. Mr. Kjaer will preach.

There will be a special musical program at the mid-week prayer service at the First Baptist church tonight. The Young People's Association will have charge.

The mid-week prayer service at the Congregational church tonight will be known as "Laymen's Night," and A. C. La Boyteaux will be the leader. The subject will be "Jesus and Two Rich Men."

"Parents' Problems" will be the subject of the annual meeting of those interested in children to be held at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church tonight. W. D Murray will be in charge.

The W. C. T. U. will hold a parlor meeting at the home of Mrs. Alvah Ten Eyck, 922 Union street, tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, when Mrs. M. D. Tomlinson will tell about the Nation W. C. T. U. at Nashville.

As superintendent of the soldier and sailor work in the W. C. T. U., Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, of Elmwood place, is preparing a Christmas box to be sent to the Mission Yacht in New York. She will appreciate donations of such articles as will be suitable for the box.

HIRES HIS DIVORCED WIFE.

Lake Placid Man Thus Solves a Distressing Domestic Problem.

Albany, Dec. 11.—Henry Jewtraw, of Lake Placid, has solved the domestic problem in simple fashion. He divorced his wife and then engaged her as housekeeper.

Jewtraw is forty years old and employed at Camp Bide-a-Wee, owned by the McElroys, of New York. Mrs. Jewtraw, that was, is some years younger, and good looking. Last summer she 'agreed to disagree" and left home and children and went to work at Saranac Lake. Her husband sued for divorce, and to aid him to obtain it Mrs. Jewtraw looked after his house and the children while he attended court in Elizabethtown.

Returning with his decree, Jewtraw was so pleased with the condition of the house and the children that he proposed that she remain as his housekeeper, offering her as good wages as she could obtain elsewhere. Thus the problem was solved, and the children are the happiest of the lot.

JERSEY SPORTSMEN OPPOSED TO LICENSE.

Millville, N. J., Dec. 11.—A majority of the gunners of South Jersey are very much opposed to the recommendation of the new State Fish and Game Commissioin and the Sportsmen's League to levy a tax or license on resident hunters.

The claim of the opposition is that they are now paying their share of taxation, and that it is the duty of the State to permit them to enjoy this sport without license. They say that if such a tax is required, it will not be long before a resident will be compelled to take out a license to catch fish.

The commission's idea is to tax each gunner, the funds to be used to stock the woods with game and relieve the State of its yearly appropriation for this purpose.

After New Broad Jump Record.

The first of the series of contests to attempt to better the athletic records of the Y. M. C. A. will be held in the associaition gymnasium tomorrow night, when the association jumpers will get together in an attempt to beat Russell J. Lawrence's record of 10 feet 1¼ inches. This record was made in the association recently, but Lawrence, who is to contest to better his own figures, did 10 feet 4½ inches at the dual meet with the Orange Y. M. C. A. at Orange Saturday night. About a dozen of the association athletes will compete. A gold medal will be awarded by the association to the winner of the event, a silver medal will be given for second place and a bronze medal for third place.

Martha Washington Council, No. 23, Daughters of America, at the meeting on Saturday night will initiate elight candidates and will entertain a delegation from Grand View Council, No. 55, of Mt. Bethel.

Mrs. Minnie Hance, of Liberty Corner, is spending some tiime with friends in North Plainfield.

The CASTLE of LIES

"It is incredible," she cried passionately, "that I, the Countess Sarahoff, should be in the dark, while an American tourist—"

The name had slipped out in her anger; she bit her lips.

"Oh, you need feel no consternation. I might have called you by that name several hours ago."

"Since you know so much," she said in bitter disgust, "perhaps you know the service I expect to ask of you."

"I might make a shrewd guess at even that."

She sank back, her fingers interlocked supporting her head. She remained some time in gloomy thought.

Suddenly a door slammed. I heard a faint shout; a tramping of feet. Then there was quiet again. I glanced at my companion. She was listening intently, her hands clutching the carved arms of the seat.

"Bah, I think I am a hysterical schoolgirl." She shrugged her shoulders in self-contempt. "Say that you know everything, monsieur, so much the better. It will save the trouble of explaining on the morrow. For I shall go on with my plan. There is danger, yes; but I have expected danger. It is too late to retreat. I have risked all on a single throw. I shall win. Say that there is treachery—I shall know how to deal with it. He is not indispensable. Yes, my friend, I have a plan that cannot fail."

"You are mistaken," I said obstinately. "Your plan will fail because, if Dr. Starva is not necessary to its success, I am. And I—"

"You will perform the service I shall ask of you. I hope, I trust, that you will do this service gladly. Not for myself, perhaps, but that you may bring happiness and peace to a downtrodden people."

"If you were asking that service of Ernest Haddon it is possible that he might do it. But if you are asking Ernest Haddon to stoop to dishonor—to masquerade in a character to which he has no right—"

"Ernest Haddon will still do that service."

We faced each other. Our eyes met in defiance. Will beat against will; an aggressive purpose against stubborn resistance. Again I saw those beautiful lips curve in a cruel smile; the eyes burn with a baneful light.

Was she so confident of her prey? Did she think that I should fall so easy a victim to her basilisk smile? If so, she erred woefully. Her beauty left me absolutely unmoved. Rather it repelled. The savage nature of the tigress showed too plainly in that instant.

"But at least you will listen to my plan?"

"Yes," I replied slowly, gazing thoughtfully at the flickering logs. "I will listen to your plan. Like yourself, I have gone too far to retreat. But remember, when you have told me all, the armed truce may be followed by open warfare."

"Do you always give warning to your victims before you trap them?" she demanded; both contemptuous and curious.

"When I am a guest at their houses, madam."

The door opened. Dr. Starva shuffled stealthily into the room. She met his distrustful glance with perfect sangfroid.

"And our visitor, this brave Captain Forbes?" she demanded lightly. "Is he as persistent as at Vitznau?"

"Bah, he annoys me, this brave captain," sneered Starva. "He comes again to ask foolish questions. But I answer him; yes, I answer him this time. For to-night, at least, we shall have peace."

Not without trepidation I thought of the shuffling feet and the shout. Dr. Starva, when crossed, would not be nice in surmounting an obstacle. Either he thought me beneath contempt or a great fool. I could have wished that I were armed in this Castle of Happiness. A few hours ago the atmosphere of the Middle Ages had clung to it and had enchanted me. But if its inmates resorted to the violent methods of that period I might be less fascinated.

Dr. Starva again seated himself at his instrument. Madame de Varnier accompanied him as if nothing unusual had happened.

I looked thoughtfully at this dangerous couple. The morrow promised much. The three of us were at cross-purposes. Each was playing his desperate game. Which of us was to conquer?

It was not long before the little concert came to an end. The enthusiasm of Dr. Starva was not proof against the emotions of the past hour. Candles were rung for. I bade them both a quiet good night, and followed the lackey who preceded me to my chamber.

I welcomed the hours of sleep. To-morrow my nerves would need to be steady. But the surprises of the day were to be followed by still another.

On my pillow was a folded piece of paper. It was a message; I could not doubt that. But when I had read it I was completely mystified in two particulars:

Who had placed the message on my pillow?

Did the sender really believe that I was Sir Mortimer?

"If Sir Mortimer Brett will call at the Grand hotel to-morrow at ten for Mr. Robinson Locke, Sir Mortimer will receive news of importance."

That was the message.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Mysterious Signal.

So Locke, as well as Forbes, had traced us to Alterhoffen! Was their arrival here, so soon after ourselves, merely a coincidence? Or could they have traveled together? Locke had certainly given me to understand that he had never seen Sir Mortimer or his mother and sister. Nor had I reason to suppose that he knew the king's messenger—at least two days ago.

If it were true that he had met none of these people previous to my leaving Lucerne, if it were true that he did not know them even now—what could have brought Locke hither?

One of three things might have happened:

Locke may have been keeping a vigilant watch on the movements of the Countess Sarahoff.

Captain Forbes might have traced us here yesterday and have joined forces with Locke.

Or Locke may have been watching me, rather than Madame de Varnier, and have posted after me, rather than after herself and her companion.

It required little imagination to reason out the affair.

Two days ago he had seen me conversing on apparently intimate terms with the Countess Sarahoff, a notorious adventuress. He came to my hotel to warn me against her; I had received his warnings lightly enough. That very evening I dined with the woman; I took the boat for Vitznau, if not in her company, in the company of Dr. Starva, whom he must have often seen with her at Lucerene. The knowledge of these facts would bring him to the scene at Vitznau.

And then? The most startling discoveries might be his.

Say that he had actually traced me as far as Vitznau. He would have made inquiries yesterday for Ernest Haddon. From whom else could he make these inquiries but the concierge? And he would learn—what? The mysterious secret that it was not really Ernest Haddon who had come to the hotel, but Sir Mortimer Brett, passing under the name of Ernest Haddon. Yes; the concierge would tell him the truth, according to his lights. An old newspaper man like Locke would be satisfied with no vague evasions.

If Locke, then, had made certain that I had entered the hotel the evening before, that I had occupied the suite of Sir Mortimer Brett, the truth would flash on him. He would then be forced to one or two conclusions: either that I was a great fool to be so guileless a victim, or that I was a much more cunning rogue than he had thought.

But the note I had found so strangely on my pillow had given no inkling of his suspicions, if he had any. That was to be expected. If Sir Mortimer, or rather myself, failed to keep the appointment, he would draw his own conclusions. And having drawn them, what would be his course of action?

He would storm the chateau for the truth. If, as seemed most likely, he had joined forces with Captain Forbes, he would realize the need of immediate action.

What with interviews between myself and Madame de Varnier, Locke, and Forbes, the day promised to be exciting. There might, I thought with infinite dread, be yet another interview. For if Forbes and Locke had succeeded in tracing us to Alterhoffen why should not Helena Brett and her mother?

I looked at my watch. I had slept soundly, lulled to sleep by the tempt-uous little stream below. It was now ten o'clock. The sun was shining brightly into my room. I could see the mountains rosy-hued in the morning light.

My door was rapped gently, then pushed open. The servant who had ushered me to my chamber entered with coffee. There was none so likely to have brought the note as he. I was tempted to test the suspicion. It might be convenient to avail myself of his services, if my suspicion were true. But I decided to make no allusion to it. For the present I had no need of the man, and if he were ignorant of the existence of the note I should risk much by making him the wiser.

"I am anxious to see Madame de Varnier," I said, raising myself on my elbow to pour out my coffee. "Is she up yet?"

"Madam never rises until after her second breakfast," replied the man. "But Dr. Starva has asked me to say that he is at your Excellency's disposal."

"He is very good," I yawned, and dismissed him.

Now that Madame de Varnier was not to be seen for the present, I wished I might have slept longer. It was too late to keep the doubtful appointment with Locke, even had I wished. But I did not wish to keep it. First of all must come Madame de Varnier's story. Afterwards events must shape their course as they would.

But it was impossible to sleep again; the glare of the light was unendurable. The noise of the river Aare seemed to rise in a steady crescendo.

I dressed leisurely, for I was determined not to leave the chateau until I had seen Madame de Varnier. And yet I had no desire for the company of Dr. Starva. I looked about for a book or magazine to beguile the hours before luncheon.

Half a dozen awaited my perusal, most of them yellow-backed French novels. One book, however, was in English. "The Foreign Office List and Diplomatic and Consular Handbook." I read curiously. I turned to Sir Mortimer Brett.

"Sir Mortimer Brett, K.C.M.G.; C.B., M.A., All Souls College, Oxford, 1879. Competitive examination and clerk of F. O., May 31, 1880. 3d Sec. Mad., 1882. Precis Writer to the late Marquis of Salisbury. Sec. State for Foreign Affairs, 1896. Transferred St. Petersburg, 2d Sec., 1896. Allowance for knowledge of Russian, May, 1887. Charge d'affaires, Jan., 1888. Transferred Constantinople. Allowance for Turkish granted. Consul General, 1902."

I read the list of Sir Mortimer's honors with a strange catching of the breath. His progress in his profession had been extraordinary. That he was a zealous and ambitious diplomat was proven by the one fact that twice his salary had been increased because he had mastered two of the most difficult languages in the world. That fact also proved that he owed his promotion not so much to influence at Court as to his own determination. He was a student as well as a diplomatist. It gave me a distinct shock that such a man should be so weak as to succumb to the wiles of a clever adventuress.

Again I read at random.

"The flag to be used by His Majesty's Diplomatic Servants, whether on shore or embarked on boats or other vessels, is the Union, with the Royal Arms in the center thereof, surrounded by a green garland—"

My eyes skipped down the page. The uniform of the consul general was fully described. The cocked hat was to be without binding—the fan or back part eleven inches, the cockade plain bullion-gold tassels, edging of black ostrich feather—I skipped that, too. I was not interested in millinery. But presently my eye wandered to this paragraph. I began to read it not without uneasiness:

540 SKYSCRAPERS WITH 6,533 FLOORS.

New York's Lofty Buildings Piled Atop Each Other Would Pierce the Clouds.

If all the skyscrapers in New York were piled one atop of the other, a building of 6,553 stories would rear itself toward high heaven. Compared to such a structure the Tower of Babel would look like a mushroom.

The Building Department finished counting the lofty buildings in the city; 540 of them have been erected since 1890, when the Pulitzer building was the first of its class.

Including the Metropolitan Life Building, which is not finished, the census of high buildings is as follows: One of forty-eight stories; one of forty-one; two of twenty-six; three of twenty-five; two of twenty-three; four of twenty-two; nine of twenty; two of nineteen; nine of eighteen; two of seventeen; nineteen of sixteen; nineteen of fifteen, eighteen of fourteen; thirteen of thirteen; 169 of twelve; 101 of eleven, 164 of ten.

The discovery of the structural possibilities of steel is what did it. Modern fireproofing methods—protecting the steel with unburnable terra cotta, and using the same material for floors and partitions and inclosing elevator shafts and stairways—made the skyscraper safe.

Rev. E. B. Saunders, of Ashaway, R. I., secretary of the Sabbath Tract Society, has been in town for a few days and attended the meeting of the society on Sunday. He had just returned from an eight weeks' trip through the South in the interest of his denomination and left for his home Monday.

The attention of renters of Safe Deposit boxes in New York is called to the fact that New York State levies a tax on the contents of the Safe Deposit box of a non-resident at his or her death, which tax may, of course, be avoided by keeping one's valuables in the same State in which one resides. It is, therefore, greatly to the advantage of a resident of New Jersey to keep personal property in a Safe Deposit box within the State.

PARK CLUB FIVE TAKES TWO OUT OF THE THREE

Although the Park Club five dropped the first game to the Elizabeth Club last night in the series of three in the Central Journal Bowling League tournament, the local team captured the other two games by good scores which helps them to maintain a leading position. The games were rolled at Elizabeth and the Parks were accompanied by a delegation of "rooters."

Elizabeth took the first game by a score of 881 to 846. The Parks ten took the next two by scores of 985 and 880 to 874. Barlow was high man in the first game with a score of 204. In the second game Daniel rolled 244, the highest of the season, while Lyman was a close second with 203. Daniel continued his good work in the third game by rolling 200, while Ball came near that mark with 192. The other scores rolled by the Park Club five were good throughout. In several instances the bowlers on the home team went above the 200 mark and made their opponents hustle to win. The score of 985 by the Parks was the highest rolled this year in the league. The scores:

LEAL'S FIVE WON FIRST GAME IN SCHOOL LEAGUE

The Leal's School basketball five defeated the North Plainfield High School basketball team by a score of 16-15 at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium yesterday afternoon in the first game of the local interscholastic league. The teams were evenly matched, and first one and then the other held the lead in the scoring. It was by a spurt of fast playing that the Leal's boys won out, for the boroughites were ahead, 13-11, up to the last few minutes. Russell Lawrence, however, broke away from his man and scored two baskets on pretty shots and Duke caged the ball from the foul line. For the boroughites, Byron McClintock increased the score by a basket from the floor, and time was called with the score 16-15 in favor of Leal's.

Though Leal's boys have had the advantage of steady practise for several weeks past, the borough five played all around them at times. The make up of the North Plainfield team is the same as represented the school last year in the league, but no practise had been held and yesterday's game was the first time the players had been together this season. The next game of the league will be played at the Y. M. C. A. next Tuesday, when the city and borough high school teams will meet. The summaries:

Leal's School.		N. P. H. S.
Brown	right forward	Herman
R. Lawrence	centre	B. McClintock
Duke (capt.)	left guard	F. McClintock
C. Lawrence	right guard	Steiner

Baskets from the floor: R. Lawrence, 4; Conroy, 3; B. McClintock, 2; Martin, 2; Duke, Steiner, F. McClintock. Goals from fouls: Duke, 3; Conroy. Referee, G. L. Listman. Umpire, Adams. Scorer, Ladd. Timer, Dallas. Twenty and fifteen minute halves.

Mrs. Valentine Utzinger, of Grandview avenue, is detained at home by illness.

SKELLY'S TEAM DEFEATED BY THE RODERICK DHUS

Charles F. Meyer, Jr.'s, Roderick Dhu bowling team clashed with Louis Skelly's Lafayettes in the tourney last night, and two out of the three games played went to the former. Though a number of 200 marks were tallied, the scores on both sides were low as a rule and several of the best pin smashers had to smile grimly when they saw their averages pulled down.

"Tune" Hewitt was the "candy boy" for the evening by getting his eye on the head pin and landing two double centuries. His first score was 152 but he followed it up with 223 and 213. Captain Skelly was off his game and in one try fell to an amateurish stage, landing 127. Harry Van Emburgh was another old-timer who was out of sorts and even Captain Meyer failed to have his usual luck. Fred Koller and Charles Ortleb saved their reputations by getting a 200 score and "Tunie" Vail and Fred Hillman did much better than in their former games.

The scores were as follows:

LAFAYETTES.
Skelly	175	127	171
Edwards	159	127	135
Hillman	144	173	117
Hewitt	152	223	213

Meyer	156	161	166
Totals	799	781	831

Umpire, C. W. Runyon; scorer, V. W. Nash, Jr.

The next games in the series will be rolled tomorrow night between Ed. Britton's Bismarcks and V. W. Nash's Jr's Washingtons.

PARK CLUB FIVE LEAD IN BOWLING TOURNAMENT.

Cranford Casino took two games from Newark Bay, last night, in the Central Journal Bowling League tournament, and Jersey City rolling on its own alleys took two games from Roselle Casino. The Parks now hold the lead in the tournament with seven victories and two defeats. The standing to date follows:

	Won.	Lost.
Park Club	7	2
Cranford	6	3
Roselle	4	5
Elizabeth	4	5
Jersey City	4	5
Newark Bay	2	7

BOWLING.

The Park Club five will visit Roselle on December 17, and roll a series of three games with the Roselle Casino team in the Central Journal Bowling League tournament. This will be the first series between these teams this season.

Basketball At "Debele Hall."

The North Plainfield High School basketball team will play the Holy Cross Club five at the old Warren chapel building tonight. The building has been fitted up for basketball and the borough boys will designate it as "Debele Hall," in honor of the donor, William G. Debele, of Somerset street.

COOPER AS A NOVELIST

Rev. William Mulford, of Fanwood, Tells About Life of "Leatherstocking" Author.

LECTURE AT MRS. SERRELL'S.

Second of Pastor's Talks, Dealing With Life of First Great American Novelist, Given Yesterday Afternoon.

Rev. W. H. Mulford, pastor of All Saints' church, Fanwood, gave the second of his series of three talks on authors, yesterday, at the home of Mrs. Lemuel William Serrell, on West Seventh street, his subject being, "James Fenimore Cooper." As in the first instance when he spoke on Oliver Wendell Holmes, the lecturer read extracts from the works of Cooper and gave an interesting sketch of his life. The third and last talk will be on "Washington Irving," and will be given at the home of Mrs. George S. Ring at a date to be decided upon after Christmas.

During the course of his remarks yesterday Mr. Mulford presented among other these facts concerning Cooper:

"James Fenimore Cooper, the American novelist, was born at Burlington, this State, September 15, 1789. Reared in the wild country on the yet unsettled estates of his father, a judge and member of Congress, he was sent to school at Albany and entered Yale in his thirteenth year, remaining for some time the youngest student there. Three years later he joined the United States Navy; but after making a voyage or two in a merchant vessel to perfect himself in seamanship, and obtaining a lieutenancy, he married and resigned his commission in 1811.

"He settled for a time at Westchester, the 'Neutral Ground' of his earliest American romance, and in 1819 produced his first book, 'Precaution,' a novel of the fashionable school. This was followed by 'The Spy,' successful at the date of issue; 'The Pioneers,' the first of the 'Leatherstocking' series; and 'The Pilot,' a bold and dashing sea story.

"For a time he quit America for Europe, where he continued to write stories, including 'Lionel Lincoln,' and the famous 'Last of the Mohicans,' believed by many to be his masterpiece. In 1883 Cooper returned to America, and immediately published 'A Letter to My Countrymen,' in which he gave his own version of the controversy he had been engaged in, and passed some sharp censure on his compatriots for their share in it. This attack he followed up with 'The Monikins,' and 'The American Democrat.'

"By many Cooper was considered one of the most popular authors that have ever written. His stories have been translated into nearly all of the languages of Europe and into some of those of Asia and are even now found worthy the honors of a cheap reprint. Balzac admired him greatly but with discrimination; Victor Hugo pronounced him greater than the great master of modern romance, and this verdict was echoed by a multitude of inferior readers, who were satisfied with no title for their favorite less than that of 'The American Scott.' His qualities were not those of the great master of fiction; but he had an inexhaustible imagination, some faculty for simple combination of incident, a homely tragic force which was very genuine and effective and up to a certain point a fine narrative."

Peddled Without a License.

Morris S. Strong, Max Bingschneider and Louis Bingschneider, all of New York, were arraigned in the city court, this morning, charged with selling furs without a license. They were arrested yesterday by Officer Brancati. Two of the defendants were unable to speak English and the other related a hard luck story that gained all three a suspension of sentence.

Christmas Exercises at School.

The Christmas exercises at the Groszmann School, at Watchung Crest, will be held Saturday afternoon, December 21, at 8 o'clock. The program will be by the children at the institution and will be a representation of the pleasures of winter and of Christmas cheer, including the appearance of Santa Claus.

Westfielders Visit Borough School.

Principal Savitz, of the Westfield High School, and Mr. Merrill, member of the Westfield Board of Education, were guests at the Somerset street school today spending the morning in visiting the various class rooms of the school.

Mrs. Demarest's Funeral.

The funeral of Mrs. Elizabeth B. Demarest, widow of Henry M. Demarest, who died at her home in Geneva, N. Y., Tuesday, will be held at the home of her son, Henry M. Demarest, of Park avenue, Saturday afternoon at 2:30.

LOCAL ELKS TO PLAY SANTA CLAUS FOR CHILDREN

Plainfield, Lodge, No. 885, B. P. O. E., has announced that it will conduct an entertainment and Christmas tree gathering for the poor children of the city as usual this year. It will be held in Reform Hall on Tuesday afternoon, December 24, and a committee is now at work completing the plans. Professional artists will amuse the little ones for an hour or two after which each boy and girl will be given candy and fruit and a useful gift. The lorge has played Santa Claus in this way for the past three years and has extended Christmas cheer to as many as 400 children at one time.

The members of the lodge appointed to look after the affair is composed of Harry C. VanEmburgh, B. Frank Coriell, Charles H. Dunham, David J. Carney, John J. Kenney and Frank Rowley.

COLORED YOUTH CARRIED TWO KINDS OF WEAPONS

Willis Hicks, an eighteen-year-old colored youth, up from the South a year, was arraigned in the city court this morning, charged with carrying a concealed weapon. He was arrested by Detective-Sergant John Flynn on Watchung avenue yesterday afternoon, who noted that he was a stranger and watched him scanning the numbers of residences. The officer opened a suit case he carried and found in it a Colt's revolver of .32 calibre. On his "hip" Hicks carried another weapon in the form of a half pint of Jersey rum bearing the name of a local saloon keeper on the bottle.

Hicks didn't appear to be anything like a gun fighter and the fact that he was carrying the revolver in his case was in his favor. He declared that he came to Plainfield from Toms River to see his sweetheart, Miss Virgie Lambert, who works for an East Seventh street family. Virgie had been looked up and came into court to tell what a good fellow Willis was. They were engaged, she said, and she knew Willis had the weapon only because he had been working in the Virginia coal fields where every man carries a gun because self-preservation is the one and only law. Some one had told Hicks about Judge Runyon's edict regarding weapon carriers and he was so badly scared he could hardly talk above a whisper. An exception was made in his case, however, and he got off with the confiscation of the revolver. Before going out he plucked up courage enough to ask for the return of his half pint, but the magistrate waved him away.

"It's against the law in New Jersey to give booze to minors," he said. "You'll be of age in three years; come back then and you can have it."

HARRY KELLY STILL WITH "HIS HONOR, THE MAYOR."

Because of the announcement made last spring that Harry Kelley, the well-known character comedian, was destined to be in a new comedy this season entitled "Deacon Flood," many people have gained the impression that he will not be with "His Honor, the Mayor," when it comes to this city a week from Saturday. Such is not the fact as the side-splitting Kelly is still at the head of the company and it is because of his popularity in it that plans for his new starring tour were changed. He will be seen in the other production probably in the course of a year.

Beside the comedian, "His Honor, the Mayor," has a company of sixty people selected by Manager Joseph M. Gaites and a scenic embellishment that surpasses the first New York presentation. The show has been appearing to crowded houses at Newark, Elizabeth, Perth Amboy, New Brunswick and other nearby cities and will doubtless receive the customary cordial welcome here.

Preparing for Christmas Exercises.

A dress rehersal of the Christmas entertainment to be given by the Senior class of the North Plainfield High School, will be held at the school Wednesday night of next week. Practically all the members of the class will take part in the affair, which will be given at the school a week from tonight.

Y. M. C. A. Orchestra Concert.

The twenty-fifth concert of the Y. M. C. A. orchestra will be given in the association auditorium next Tuesday night. Martin A. Korff, leader of the orchestra, is in charge of the program, which will include vocal solos by Mrs. A. B. Price, of Westfield, accompanied by Miss Agnes E. Bailey.

Floyd D. Woodhull, of West Front street, has gone to Lake Hopatcong, where he will spend a few days looking after his summer home at that place.

HE TELLS CENTRAL'S SIDE

Vice President Besler Explains his Road's Trouble with New Haven and Hartford.

TRAFFIC CHANGES THE EFFECT.

Says It Is a Hardship on the Public —Official Statement Is Given Out.

Considerable light from the inside was shed last night at the regular monthly meeting of the Newark Board of Trade upon the controversy now existing between the Central Railroad of New Jersey and the New York, New Haven and Hartford Road over the interchange of freight between the two at Jersey City. W. G Besler, of North Plainfield, vice-president of the Central road, defined the position of his road, declared that it was in the controversy for the protection of its patrons rather than for its own interests, and declared that before March 17, 1908, when the existing arrangement will be cancelled, it was probable that the Central would have made arrangements to take care of its traffic independent of the New Haven road.

Mr. Besler's address was made after the report of the transportation and freight committee of the board had been handed in. He reviewed the agreement which, he said, had existed for twenty years between his road and the New Haven, whereby the latter was to accept traffic from the Central at Jersey City, and denounced as unfair the cancellation of the arrangement and the shifting of freight from his line for New England points to the New Haven line via Phillipsburg, which was entailed by the refusal of that road to accept traffic at Jersey City.

He addressed the board for about half an hour, and at the conclusion of the meeting gave out the following statement.

"The public may be interested to know that the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey in its controversy with the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, is not only defending its own rights but those of the public, since the severance of through connections between these systems via Jersey City means a discontinuance of a very important transportation service between great commercial centres.

"The general public has no particular interest in questions between railroads relating to longer hauls and consequently gerater revenue, but it has a right to expect protection and to know that its interests are safeguarded. All public-spirited men, representatives of industries, boards of trade and other commercial bodies, should consider most carefully the far-reaching effect should this highway of commerce between New England and the middle States be destroyed.

"These favorable traffic interchange arrangements via Jersey City have been in effect for more than twenty years, establishing a short route, making possible quick service and warranting low rates.

"These transportation advantages have, in a large measure, encouraged the establishment of extensive and important industries along the line of the Central Railroad of New Jersey and connections, as well as the exchange of a large traffic between communities in New England and New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and other States; there are large sections in the latter States which are only served by the railroads which have their New York terminals through the Jersey Central. Imagine the embarrassment and damage to many of these localities, as well as to the large general business, should the purpose of destroy the interchange relations via Jersey City prevail. The disastrous effect so far as it relates to shippers and receivers of freight throughout New England is no different than that which applies to other communities, only it is doubtful whether the New England public have as yet studied with their usual thoughtfulness the seriousness of this condition and realize the fact that their channels of transportation are gradually being limited and changed for selfish purposes regardless of consequences and the welfare of patrons or the public.

"The New Haven Road has expressed itself as being prepared to open what it calls its 'Northern Gateway,' by way of the Poughkeepsie bridge. The connection of this gateway with the Jersey Central is over a single track railroad, known as the Lehigh and Hudson River Railway, which runs between Easton and Maybrook; at the latter point connection is made with the New York, New Haven and Hartford system. This route, due to its physical condition and greater distance, it not a practical proposition and cannot serve the communities as is essential. This especially applies to dispatch business and traffic originating at points east

ENDORSE C. ADDISON SWIFT

Elizabeth Republicans Approve District Court Judge for Prosecutor.

HE IS TO BE NAMED IN MARCH.

Swift and Hetfield Will Probably Occupy Prosecutor's Office After May 1.

The action of the Downtown Republican Club in endorsing District Court Judge C. Addison Swift, of Elizabeth, as a candidate for county prosecutor to succeed N. C. J. English, it is said will be followed by other endorsements by Republican organizations throughout the county. Desuite the fact that Prosecutor English's assistant, John K. English, is making a heroic fight to succed his uncle, Judge Swift is the slated candidate and Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., of this city, is picked for his assistant. This slate was agreed upon months ago and is said to have the approval of State Senator E. R. Ackerman, of this city, who will make the recommendation to the Governor.

Contrary to general belief, the appointments are not to be announced on January 1 for the terms of the present incumbents do not expire until May 1. It is understood that Governor-elect Fort will be asked to make the appointments in March. John K. English claims the support of Assemblyman John R. Moxon and of prominent Plainfield and Elizabeth Republicans. It is not believed that Mr. Moxon will make a stand for him when the time comes and so far as can be learned English has not boomers here. Like Swift, Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., is at present a member of the Union County Board of Elections and is a strong regular organization worker.

TWO SCHOOLS PREFERRED

Appropriation for Darrow Ave. Building Sufficient for Two Necessary Structures.

CLINTON AVENUE NEEDS ONE.

Urgent Need for School Accommodations In Far West End Where City Owns Desirable Tract.

The suggestion has been made and is now being agitated among interested citizens that inasmuch as the Board of Education has thus far been unable to secure an appropriation of $110,000 for the proposed new public school at Darrow avenue and Essex street, it would be a wise plan to erect two schools, one at the above-named location and another on the land on West Front street near Clinton avenue, which was purchased last summer by the Board of Education.

This, it is claimed, would more adequately meet the school requirements in the rapidly-growing part of the city known as the West End. By the erection of two schools instead of one, as proposed, the Irving School would still retain the pupils now attending there and would be able to do so until they reach the age when they enter the High School.

Under the present arrangements pupils are obliged to leave the Irving School and go to the Grammar School at an age that is considered too young for such a distance. In the opinion of many leading citizens there is an urgent need at present for greater school accommodations in the West End. The population of children is growing at a rapid pace and they cannot all be taken care of at the Irving School. A building at Darrow avenue and Essex street would give the Irving School the relief it needs, while another new school near Clinton avenue would provide for that growing section and besides the children would not have so great a distance to walk.

More than a year ago residents of the West End between Grant and Clinton avenues and even further west petitioned the Common Council for a new school in that section of the city. The matter was referred to the Board of Education and the proposition was approved by that body. A little later the property on West Front street, just east of Clinton avenue, was acquired.

In speaking of the matter, H. W. Marshall, president of the Board of Trade, himself a resident of the West End, strongly advocates the erection of two schools instead of one, and he believes that this can be accomplished for $100,000 or a trifle more. He is of the opinion that the interests of the taxpayers would be better conserved in this way than by spending

SKILLMAN GETS 5 YEARS

Judge Booream Sentences Aged Forger to Long Term and $1,000 Fine.

HIS COUNSEL ASKS NEW TRIAL.

Former Congressman Clark Claims He Can Prove Lanehart Would Have Left Forger the Property.

William H. Skillman, former president of the New Jersey Horticultural Society was sentenced by Judge Theodore Booraem in the Somerset court yesterday to serve five years in the State prison and to pay a fine of $1,000 for uttering a forged will of his old friend and neighbor, the late William Lanehart, for the purpose of obtaining half of the Lanehart estate, valued at $19,000.

The aged defendant left his farm near Blawenburg at an early hour yesterday morning and arrived at court accompanied by his counsel, former Congressman Alvah A. Clark. Mr. Clark made an application for a rule to show cause why a new trial should not be granted on the grounds that the verdict was against the evidence and that the jury had been influenced against the defendant by the biased charge made by Judge Booraem.

Mr. Clark asserted that the evidence of Miss Jennie Opdyke to the effect that Lanehart had told her that he intended to leave Skillman a large share of his property, and that he had also had Skillman draw up his will, was treated with contempt by Judge Booraem in his charge to the jury.

The young woman, he said, was of high character and the community of the Township of Montgomery in which she lived was now up in arms and protesting that an error had been committed by the court.

Judge Booraem refused to grant the order, saying that in his judgment the verdict was in accordance with the evidence and that there was nothing in his charge to improperly influence the jury, but the defendant still had an opportunity to carry the matter to the Court of Review.

Judge Booraem informed Mr. Clark, with much spirit, that the court ignored his assertion that the community was aroused over an alleged error of the court. Judge Booraem gave the counsel for the defense to understand that the court was not influenced or swayed in the least by the alleged uprising of the community, but confined itself strictly to the evidence and that was before it.

Mr. Clark then made a plea for mercy for the defendant. He told of the high position he had occupied in the community, and said that he had already been financially drained and physically wrecked by the litigation in the case.

Skillman showed no emotion after sentence was passed. His counsel at once served the court with a notice of appeal, and the court set the bail of the prisoner at $5,000.

Skillman's friend, William H. Ely, who swore that he saw Lanehart sign the will, which the jury has declared a forgery, qualified as one of his bondsmen.

He underwent a rigid cross-examination by the court, and then testified that his property was worth $4,000. Charles N. Hoagland and Charles C. Duryea, neighbors of Skillman, also qualified as his bondsmen, after which the aged defendant was released and went back to his home.

Lectured in Newark.

Dr. Maximilian P. E. Groszmann, of the Watchung Crest school, lectured at the Newark public library last night before the Newark branch of the National Association on the Cultivation of the German Language. He repeated his lecture on the "Twilight of the Gods," recently delivered before the German Scientific Society of New York city. The lecture was in German and was largely attended by members of the association. At its conclusion, the members of the association engaged in a discussion of the topic, and there were further remarks by Dr. Groszmann.

Junior Class Pins Arrive.

The members of the junior class of the North Plainfield High School received their class pins yesterday. The pins are of gold, and are the shape of an inverted shield, bearing the letters N. P. H. S., and the class year '08. The class colors, red and gold, are carried out on the pin by the use of red enamel in the design. Dieges & Clust, of New York, made the pins, and the chairman of the committee in charge was George Parsons, president of the junior class of the school.

Dr. Lewis to Address Men's Club.

Rev. A. H. Lewis, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, will speak before the Men's Club of the church in the church parlors Sunday night. His topic will be "Dark Blue Steel Manhood."

DENTISTS TO MAINTAIN LIST OF DELINQUENTS

The question of maintaining a delinquent list for the protection of the members was an interesting topic for discussion at the regular December meeting banquet of the Plainfield Dental Society held at Truell Hall, last night. It was the opinion of those who introduced the subject and led in the discussion that it is a matter that must be handled with great care. No definite action was taken, it having been decided to lay it over for a time. There was also a discussion of incidents of practice. The banquet preceding the meeting was an excellent one and fully in keeping with the reputation of the Hall.

"CLOTHES-CUTTING MANIA" A NEW BRAIN AFFECTION

"Clothes-cutting mania" is the latest form of brain affection according to testimony submitted in the city court this morning by Mrs. James Saunders, of Plainfield avenue. She appeared against her husband, who recently wrecked her entire wardrobe by slashing various skirts, shirtwaists and jackets with a knife, and declared that in her brief married life he had committed the same act seven times.

"When he can't find clothes to cut, Your Honor," she said, "he tears table cloths and curtains to pieces. He's just naturally got take his spite out on something."

Saunders shifted uneasily from one foot to the other when Judge Runyon asked him for an explanation of his conduct. He admitted destroying his wife's clothes but could offer no reason for doing it other than he "must have been mad." Detective-Sergeant John Flynn, who arrested him, vouchsafed the information that Mr. and Mrs. Saunders frequently quarrelled about money matters and other things and his queer action was probably brought about by an unusually angry "spat."

The prisoner stated that he earned $17 a week and from it could save enough to soon pay for the clothing he slashed. This agreement was satisfactory to Mrs. Saunders and the case was continued until the entire amount was made up. The articles Saunders made ready for the rag bag were worth about $100.

SHOT NEGRO WHO HUNTED ON HIS FARM.

Township Committeeman Van Goodman, of Fanwood township, whose farm is located at Ash Brook, and was has been bothered greatly by hunters this fall and winter, caused the arrest of John Peterson, a Westfield negro, yesterday. Peterson, when told to get off the Goodman place, assaulted Mr. Goodman with his gun. Mr. Goodman called his hired help, and they gave chase for over a mile. Van Treiple, a workman on the Goodman farm, brought Peterson to a halt with a load of bird shot.

Peterson was taken to Westfield police headquarters, and Dr. Savoyne was called to pick the shot from his hip and hand. When brought before Judge Toucey last night Peterson swore that he went hunting alone, and was not one of the two men whom Mr. Goodman said were on his farm and had attempted to assault him. The hired men all testified that Peterson was the man. Peterson furnished $300 bonds to await the action of the Grand Jury.

After securing bail Peterson swore out a warrant for the arrest of Van Treiple, and charged him with assault. Treiple was held in $300 bonds to await the action of the Grand Jury. Mr. Goodman went his bail.

Meeting of School Military Company.

About seventy-five boys of the Plainfield High School interested in the formation of a military company at the school, held a meeting in Commandant James D. Macnab's room at the school yesterday recess. Plans for the corps were talked over and it was announced that the examinations for officers in the new organization will be held immediately after the Christmas vacation. Drill manuals were distributed among the candidates for office from the three upper classes of the school and sections of the school of the soldier, school of the squad and school of the company assigned for study. The boy soldiers will be uniformed and will drill every Friday for one hour.

DISPUTE VICKERY CLAIM

Counsel for Mrs. Weir-Lewis Has Had Proceedings Stayed Until Rule is Argued.

WANTS ATTACHMENT SET ASIDE.

Counsel for Society Woman In Communication States That His Client Disputes Validity of Claim.

Mrs. Nina Weir-Lewis, a former member of Plainfield society who is now residing abroad with her daughters, disputes the validity of the claim made by James H. Vickery, of Berlin, who has caused an attachment to be levied on her handsome home in North Plainfield. All proceedings in the case are stayed pending the argument of a rule granted to show cause why the attachment should not be set aside, Mrs. Weir-Lewis, through her counsel, Craig A. Marsh, attacking the attachment on the ground that it is entirely improper, as when she left Berlin during 1906, the year the alleged debt is declared by Vickery to have been contracted, she did so with the full knowledge of her friends and that Mr. Vickery subseuently visited her in Dresden.

Recently, Timothy H. Kelly, of Elizabeth, acting for Vickery, got an attachment, claiming $3,676.07, which he swore was due his client for professional services. Mr. Vickery is a lawyer.

In this connection, Mr. Marsh, as Mrs. Weir-Lewis' counsel, has sent the following explanatory communication to The Daily Press:

"Editor, The Daily Press:

"My attention having been called to an article published in your news columns respecting an action brought by one Vickery, of Berlin, against Mrs. Nina May Lewis, in which an attachment was levied on her residence property in North Plainfield, I request that you will state with as much prominence as was given to the news item referred to, the fact that Mrs. Lewis disputes the validity of the claim on which the action was brought; that the court has granted her a rule to show cause why the attachment should not be set aside; and that all proceedings in the action have been stayed and will so remain until the court shall have decided whether the rule shall be made absolute.

"Yours truly,
"CRAIG A. MARSH."

DR. GALBRAITH'S FUNERAL.

Solemn Mass of Requiem Said In St. Mary's Church This Morning.

With a large gathering of relatives and friends in attendance, many of them from distant points, the funeral of Dr. Edwin C. Galbraith was held in St. Mary's church this morning. A solemn mass of requiem was said by Rev. Father Bogan, assisted by Fathers Delehanty and Sciola. The floral tributes were exceptionally numerous and included set pieces from former classmates in the University of Pennsylvania dental college and the Fraternal Order of Eagles at Elizabeth and Hoboken. Burial was made in St. Mary's cemetery.

Exhibit of Watercolors.

H. S. Levey, an art collector from Paris, who has been living in New York city, has arranged for a display of his collection of water colors by American and European artists at the Plainfield Art store in the Y. M. C. A. building, and the exhibition opened yesterday afternoon. An opportunity will be given art lovers to visit the store free of charge and inspect the collection the remainder of this week and all next week. The pictures exhibited include the work of many of the famous present day water-colorists.

Held a Successful Luncheon.

A most successful luncheon was held Tuesday afternoon at the Park Club under the auspices of the Daughters of the Cross Circle, King's Daughters. The affair was in charge of Mrs. John L. Watson, Mrs. Chas. A. Reed, Mrs. S. St. J. McCutchen and Mrs. F. W. Iredell. Mrs. Charles L. Lyman was in charge of the sale of fancy articles. The circle netted about $100.

Funeral of James F. Pangborn.

The funeral of James F. Pangborn was held last night at his late home on East Seventh street, last night. It was conducted by Rev. Lewis E. Bond and was attended by a large gathering of relatives and friends. Burial was made this morning in Hillside cemetery.

Miss M. Ball, of Newark, is spending several months at the home of James Frost, on the Boulevard.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

A jubilation service to celebrate the cancellation of the first mortgage on the Presbyterian manse was held in the chapel last night. Many parishioners turned out and there was an informal rejoicing at the burning of the mortgage, which three years ago amounted to $900. At that time a sinking fund was established to pay it off, and but a short time ago the necessary total was realized. There is still a second smaller mortgage on the manse and the fund will be kept in existence to cancel that. At the election of elders and deacons of the church at last night's parish meeting, the present parishioners were in each case re-elected.

The fair under the auspices of the Junior League of the Methodist church opened this afternoon in the parish house and will be continued tonight and tomorrow afternoon and night. The various booths are presided over by the members of the league and many boroughites are taking advantage of the excellent opportunity offered for purchasing dainty and useful Christmas presents.

"A. G. E. Club Tea Party," an original farce, will be the feature of the entertainment to be given by the G. E. Club for the benefit of the piano fund of the New Market school next Tuesday evening. "Our Aunt from California," another farce, will also be given by the club members, and during the intermission there will be musical selections by local talent.

Those on the honor roll of the New Market primary school for the past month are Lizzie Thompson, Alice Hoffman, Mary Zellar, Jennie Kelloway, Loretta Kerwin, Frances Metze, Madeline Maguire, Henry Romph, LeRoy Voorhees, Frederick Roth, Edward Kerwin, Alexander Stillwagon, William McEvoy and Clarence Smith.

The Borough Council will hold a special meeting Monday night to finish up routine business for the year. This will be the last meeting for Mayor Wyckoff.

'PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

Christmas exercises of the Methodist Sunday-school will be held Sunday evening, December 22, in the church. On Monday afternoon, the 23d, the children will have a Christmas tree and receive their presents.

The Christmas service at the Park Avenue Baptist church will be held Sunday afternoon, December 22, under the auspices of the Sunday-school. It will be in the form of a cantata.

The choir of the First Baptist church has commenced its rehearsal of Christmas music, and the Sunday-school is also rehearsing special music to be sung at the Christmas Sunday service.

The Christmas sale under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the First M. E. church opened this afternoon in Vincent chapel. It will be continued this evening, tomorrow afternoon and evening.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Faith chapel will meet within a few days to settle up the accounts of the recent fair. Announcement will then be made of the net proceeds. It is believed that about $300 will be the profit.

Tomorrow night the Seventh-Day Adventist church will hold its regular Friday evening service in the W. C. T. U. room, Babcock building. Subject, "Signs of Christ's Second Coming." All are welcome to this service. Regular church service Saturday at 3:15 p. m.

All day meeting of the Christian and Missionary Alliance will be held on Friday, December 13, 100 Madison avenue, W. C. T. U. rooms. Rev. H. J. and Mrs. Pierson will be present and conduct the services of the day. Mr. and Mrs. Pierson are well known in this city, having conducted a series of meetings here several times before going to California, from which they have recently returned, after an absence of ten years. The morning services begins at 10:30. At 3 p. m. Mrs. Pierson will give an address. All are welcome.

M. J. Sheridan, of this city, is a guest at the Prince George Hotel, New York.

Miss Minnie Serrell, of Plainfield avenue, continues to improve from an attack of typhoid fever.

CITY JOTTINGS.

—Mrs. John Valiant, of Myrtle avenue, and A. E. Willard, of West Front street, both deny that it was their dogs which engaged in a fight last week when Robert Reed was bitten.

—The Watchung Hunt Club will meet at Scotch Plains, near the home of Dr. Coles, Saturday afternoon, for the weekly chase. The farmers and their friends are invited to join in the ride.

—If the weather permits Contractor C. M. Meeker will complete the work of macadamizing Arlington place within the next week. He expects to finish West End avenue this week and will then start operations on Arlington place.

—Charles W. McCutchen in his illustrated lecture to be given at the Y. M. C. A. Friday night, December 20, for the benefit of Faith chapel, will describe life and scenes along the River Nile. His lecture is highly instructive and interesting and his views are considered among the best yet presented on this subject.

—The Councilmanic street committee has decided that after the brick pavement work on Watchung avenue and West Front street and at Front and Somerset streets is completed, nothing further will be done until spring. The sides of the street outside the trolley tracks will not be paved at this time. This decision was reached this week after a conference.

RAHWAY CHURCH WILL HOLD BIG CELEBRATION.

Services to mark the completion of the seven months' work of renovating St. Mary's R. C. church will take place at Rahway next Sunday. The decorations have been made in keeping with the architecture of the edifice. The carvings of the capitals and frieze have been reproduced in varying designs throughout the arches and plain spaces, culminating in the sanctuary. The color scheme is the two shades of terra-cotta, relieved by the cream and green.

In the dome of the sanctuary has been placed a representation of the Holy Trinity in the clouds of heaven, surrounded by a court of angels with St. Peter and St. Paul in the foreground. Around the altar are four adoring angels of Roman design. Over the confessional are two pictures of the Good Shepherd and the Sacred Heart. The chapel of the blessed Virgin is a shrine, culminating in the new image of Mary and the child Jesus.

Bishop John J. O'Connor will preside at the solemn mass of thanksgiving at 10:30 a. m. Sunday. The mass will be sung by Rev. P. Leo, assistant priest at St. Mary's. The deacon will be Rev. B. M. Bogan, of Plainfield, and the sub-deacon Rev. Jerome Smith, of Elizabeth.

Rev. George F. Brown, the rector of St. Mary's, will be master of ceremonies, assisted by Rev. T. A. Wallace, chancellor of the Newark Diocese. The sermon will be delivered by Rev. William T. McLaughlin, rector of St. Augustine's church, Union Hill.

BUSINESS OF BENEVOLENCE.

John D. Rockefeller Advocates a Corporation to Manage It.

It takes a practical mind to make a fortune, says John D. Rockefeller, according to Leslie's Weekly. Men have often said in my hearing, "Oh, how I wish I were rich! If I had money I should do this great work or that." Now, those men will never be rich. They haven't got the purpose and practical bent of mind for it. They think of the fruits of victory without the struggle. I fear it it necessary to fix the mind pretty firmly upon the making of money before it is possible to plan its spending. I remember clearly when the financial plan—if I may call it so—of my life was formed. It was out in Ohio, under the ministration of a dear old minister, who preached, "Get money; get it honestly, and then give it wisely." I wrote that down in a little book. I have the little book yet, with that writing in it. I have tried ever since to "get money honestly and to give it wisely." There is a great deal of folly shown in the distribution of benevolence. If substance is a trust, then it is very serious business, this matter of dispensing it. One can't simply get rid of it and have a free conscience. A responsibility attaches to the distribution. I have an idea on that point, to this effect: Let us have benevolence trusts—corporations to manage the business of benevolence.

Puzzle.

A certain two men are possessed each of exactly $10,000.

One buys a modest house for $4,000, a modest business for $3,000, and salts the remainder of his money away against a rainy day.

The other puts his entire $10,000 into a motor car, and thereby acquires such credit that he can have a house worth $50,000, and become a partner in a business paying $100,000 a year.

Assuming that both men have a wife and some daughters, which of them lives to kick himself?—Puck.

Miss Grace Jones, of Flemington, has been spending a few days with friends in town.

Mrs. Kate Williams, of Roselle, has returned home after spending a few days with friends here.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

GOLF.

Golfers are weatherproof and the rain did not keep any away from the eleventh annual meeting of the Metropolitan Golf Association Tuesday night at Delmonico's. The gathering included lookers-on as well as voting delegates, the routine business being transacted briskly and opinions being exchanged on many matters of importance to local golfers.

Secretary Calkins reported fifty-seven clubs in membership, located in the order of twenty-two in New Jersey, three in Connecticut, ten on Long Island and twenty-two in New York exclusive of Long Island. The Scarsdale Golf Club and the Glen Ridge Club have become members during the year and five clubs have resigned, four of them, the Eastern Parkway, Richmond Hill, Westchester and Nyack clubs, through the inability to hold their grounds and the Meadow Brook Club because the members now golf at Garden City.

The report also stated that in accord with a resolution at the last annual meeting the Massachusetts Golf Association and the Golf Association of Philadelphia had been communicated with to learn if it would be desirable to hold an open championship tournament under the auspices of the three associations. The replies were adverse to such a tournament. Regarding the metropolitan open championship, although the association stood ready to assist in financing the event, it could not be held, as no club saw its way clear to offer its links.

Here Secretary Calkins interpolated this personal opinion, which gained applause: "It is to be hoped another season will see a resumption of these tournaments. The association will be able another year to assume the larger part of the expense, if not all of it, and all that is needed is a club willing to offer its links. While an open event is not altogether easy to run off in just the right kind of way, it is nevertheless an undeniable aid to improvement in play, not only for the professionals, but also for the amateurs, who gain much from keen competition with the salaried players. In my belief, one reason for the superiority as a whole abroad, especially professional play, is the lack of more frequent open tournaments here. The proper management of such tournaments could accomplish a great deal of good to the professional player, who, it must be admitted, is more often harmed than helped by the well-intended but incautious and unthinking social equality which largely prevails today in the clubhouses and clubrooms."

The report included a summary of the M. G. A. championship and of thirteen open tournaments, with the scores in the Lesley cup intercity match, won for the third time by the M. G. A. team under the captaincy of W. J. Travis, and a tribute to the "magnificent hospitality" of the Massachusetts Golf Association and the Country Club at Brookline. The handicap committee had saved $243 in expenses by substituting a list of ratings up to nine for the long list of 2,500 names. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $863. The balance a year ago was $390. The receipts this year have been $300 more than last year and the expenditures $172 less.

As usual the ticket named by the nominating committee, Findlay S. Douglas, Howard F. Whitney and W. D. Vanderpool, received a unanimous vote. It read: President, W. Fellowes Morgan; vice-president, Arden M. Robbins; secretary, Leighton Calkins; treasurer, Frank C. Jennings. Committeemen, G. T. Brokaw, J. R. Maxwell, Jr., James L. Taylor, John Reid, Jr., Grinnell Willis.

FOOTBALL.

It is probable that Captain Lucius H. Biglow, formerly of this city, who captained the Yale football team the past season, is through with athletics. He said last night that he had refused to join the Yale crew for next spring, although he pulled the strongest oar in the varsity shell two years ago. His parents oppose his rowing any longer, and will keep him out of the shell next spring.

Captain Biglow has notified Coach Kennedy, of the Yale crew, of his inability to join the rowing squad when it is called out next month. Biglow's parents also wish him to go into business as soon as he is graduated next fall.

If this is done, Biglow will not be available as head coach for the football eleven next fall, although it is football tradition for a Yale captain to return as head coach.

It is generally thought that Yale's gridiron head coach next fall will be Tad Jones. He will be graduated in June, but he will return as director of the Y. M. C. A. of the Sheffield Scientific School for next year. He will not be eligible for athletic teams, but will probably be football and baseball coach.

Lieutenant Colonel Robert Howze, commandant of cadets at the Military Academy at West Point, has written a letter to Commander W. S. Benson, commandant of mid-shipmen, congratulating the Navy football team, which shows the feeling which exists between these institutions, notwithstanding the spirited athletic rivalry.

Mr. Barkalew Prizes It.

Former Freeholder Lewis E. Barkalew, of Lincoln place, recently regained possession of a valuable book belonging to him many years ago. It is entitled "The Christian Economy," and was translated from the original Greek from an old manuscript found in the Island of Patmos, where St. John wrote his Book of Revelations. The book was published by Milton F. Cushing, one of the original newspaper publishers of Plainfield, in 1840, and a copy of it was secured by Mr. Barkalew in 1850. Sometime afterward he lost the copy and could never get trace of i .He was surprised one day when the book was returned to him through the mail by the wife of his brother, R. C. Barkalew, who resides in Newark. It had been in his brother's possessioin during the tiine it was lost, apparently being taken away with other effects years ago, when Mr. Barkalew's brother moved to Newark.

ASKS FOR AN INQUIRY INTO LANG'S SANITY

Alan H. Strong, counsel for Frederick Lang, the convicted murderer at New Brunswick, yesterday announced to Supreme Court Justice Swayze in the presence of Prosecutor George Berdine that he would at some date to be fixed make formal application for a commission to examine his client's mental condition.

Mr. Strong said that he would present some facts to the court at that time which he believed would indicate to the court that a commission was necessary, and that Lang should be confined in the asylum.

The appeal of the case to the United States Supreme Court will probably not be affected by this step. The appeal and bond have been filed there and Mr. Strong is very desirous of settling his contention that a man cannot be tried on an indictment voted for by a grand juror over 65 years of age, if he had no opportunity of challenging such grand juror.

If the conviction should be set aside Mr. Strong can present Lang's mental condition as a reason why he should not be tried again, and if affirmed, will present the same reason why he should not be hanged.

Lang, who is only 24 years of age, has been twice examined by medical men. The first time Dr. Britton G. Evans, made famous by the Thaw case, pronounced him sane. That was before the trial. Some time after the trial the murderer became violent in the jail, and once set fire to his cell. He was again examined, but the physicians declined to pronounce him insane.

Lang murdered his niece, Katie Gordon, at Piscatawaytown, April 20, 1906. He escaped, but was captured in New Brunswick on June 6th, following. He was convicted of murder in the first degree July 17, and sentenced to be hanged on August 28. The Messrs. Strong appealed but the conviction was sustained in the New Jersey higher courts.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Howe's new series of moving pictures is tonight's attraction at the New Plainfield theatre.

When Theodore Kremer wrote "The Fatal Wedding," it is hardly possible that he realized that he had completed a melodrama which was destined to become one of the greatest dramatic successes of years, and which would be translated into other languages and produced on three continents. The reason that "The Fatal Wedding" has done all of this is because it is a play that is a true picture of human nature skillfully and delightfully told. It is to be the attraction at the New Plainfield theatre tomorrow night.

"The Great Divide," the most striking dramatic success the American stage has seen for a quarter of a century, will be played at the New Plainfield theatre Saturday afternoon and night. This news will be received with delight by our play lovers, for no drama of recent years has attracted so much attention as "The Great Divide." For nearly two entire seasons it attracted crowded houses to the Princess and Daly's theatres, New York, being presented in the metropolis nearly 500 times. The road tour is being directed by Henry Miller, whose name is inseparably linked with the success of the play. The cast was selected by this famous actor-manager with great care, and the production is an exact duplicate of the New York original.

Every year adds to the worthily attained popularity of the golden-voiced singer, Al. H. (Metz) Wilson, who has come to be known among theatre-goers as the ambassador of German dialect. Supported by a splendid company, all the stage accessories that go with a successful production, and his "New Metz in the Alps," the strongest production in which he has ever appeared, the present season's tour is amounting to an ovation. He will be seen at the New Plainfield theatre next Monday night.

COLUMBIA ALUMNI DINNER.

New Jersey Association Will Have Governor-elect as Guest.

The annual reunion and dinner of the New Jersey Alumni Association of Columbia University will be held in English's Hall, East Orange, tonight.

The reunion this year promises to be by far the most interesting and successful yet planned by the association. Among the guests and speakers will be President Nicholas Murray Butler, of the University; Hamilton W. Mabie, Dean Goetze, of the School of Applied Sciences; prominent members of the faculty and alumni and John Franklin Fort, Governor-elect.

A quartet from the Glee Club will sing old college songs and add to the entertainment of the evening. It is the expectation of the association that there will be a rousing band of Columbia men presnt to greet Governor-elect Fort and other distinguished guests, and every one will be made welcome.

THE PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT.

President Theodore Roosevelt Issued This Statement from the White House Last Night.

In view of the issuance of the call of the Republican National Committee for the convention the President makes the following statement:

"On the night after election I made the following announcement: 'I am deeply sensible of the honor done me by the American people in thus expressing their confidence in what I have done and have tried to do. I appreciate to the full the solemn responsibility this confidence imposes upon me, and I shall do all that in my power lies not to forfeit it. On the fourth of March next I shall have served three and a half years, and this three and a half years constitute my first term. The wise custom which limits the President to two terms regards the substance and not the form and under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination.'

"I have not changed and shall not change the decision thus announced."

A DESERVED REBUKE.

County Judge Edward S. Atwater has profited by experience and his rebuke to clemency seekers for a convicted "black-hand" letter-writer, yesterday, was most timely. After the culprit had been convicted, Mayor P. J. Ryan and some Elizabeth aldermen petitioned the court for leniency. In their most astounding statement, the mayor and his friends cast undeserved reflection on the jury by declaring that they did not believe the defendant guilty. This unprecendented action brought forth a severe rebuke from the court, who very properly said that after a jury has announced its verdict, "it is not for the mayor of the city, or any other person, to tell the court that it does not believe that the offender is guilty."

The incident recalls the miscarriage of justice in a case of attempted assault by a negro on a little girl some time ago where there did not appear to be one mitigating circumstance. Placing full reliable on petitions made by two or three residents of New Jersey, who, it is only fair to say, had no knowledge of the true facts of the case, the court in that instance showed mercy when none was due. The real fact was that the court had been imposed upon and was not in any sense blameable. Naturally, however, there was considerable indignation over the mildness of the judge would not place so much dependence on petitions, many of which are misguided, misdirected and really injurious to the true cause of justice.

SUGGESTION TO SCHOOL BOARD.

Would it not be a better investment of the taxpayers' money to divide the appropriation for the Darrow avenue school and erect one in the far west end as well? There is urgent need for school accommodations in that section, particularly for the benefit of little children who are now compelled to go a great distance from home to obtain their education. Consequently many citizens naturally question the wisdom of spending such a large amount on the Darrow avenue structure when it means that the proper accommodations can not be provided in the extreme west and for some time to come.

The desired appropriation for the Darrow avenue building is placed at $110,000, and it is said to be doubtful whether it will be another case like the high school when the stated appropriation was not entirely sufficient. At any rate $110,000 is a rather large sum to spend on one building when it would serve the purpose for two on a less elaborate scale. In the vicinity of Clinton avenue and Front street, school accommodations for the little ones would serve a good purpose. The erection of a building in that locality would be a welcome thing. The city already holds title to a suitable site.

If the Board of Education reconsiders its desire to expend $110,000 on the single building and decides to use the amount in the erection of two school houses, it will be following sound public sentiment.

The Daily Press will be glad to receive communications on the suggestion that two schools, instead of one, be built with the $110,000 desired for the proposed Darrow avenue structure. Do you want proper school accommodations in the far west end where the city owns suitable property for a much needed structure?

The Republican organization has selected two worthy candidates for the Prosecutor's office in the persons of C. Addison Swift and Walter L. Getfield, Jr. It is safe to say that general approval would be given both nominations.

CHURCH CHRISTMAS FAIR PROVES A BIG SUCCESS

Highly successful, socially as well as financially, the Christmas fair and bazaar under the auspices of the Women's Guild of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, ended last evening at the church parish house, the second night of the affair. A large number of the parishioners thronged the booths where articles suitable for Christmas presents were sold in the afternoon and evening, and a neat sum was realized by the church women for the expenses of the parish during the winter months.

The committee in charge of the affair consisted of the officers of the women's guild of the parish, Miss Elizabeth Forster, president; Mrs. I. M. Peterson, vice-president; Mrs. William Grannatt, secretary, and Mrs. Harry C. Fraleigh, treasurer. At the various booths, in charge of the women, girls and boys of the church, were the following parishioners:

Fancy table—Mrs. Merrill, Miss Alice Forster, Mrs. Juan A. Babcock and Mrs. Fred Harris. Cake table—Mrs. Bennett and Mrs. Brooks. Chinese Laundry—Mrs. Sutton and Mrs. Campbell. Candy table—Mrs. Dudley Ferguson and Mrs. Charles Stace. Ice cream table—Mrs. E. E. Brown, Mrs. Harry C. Fraleigh, and Mrs. I. M. Peterson. Girls' fancy table—the Misses Helen Sutton, Dorothy Merrill, Ruth Morris, Emily Brentnall, Susan and Jane Bennett, Annie Mauger, Fannie Brooks and Grace Squier. Girls' chocolate table—Miss Josie Romond and Miss Nellie Squirer. Boys' novelty table—Juan Babcock, Lawrence Sutton and Neilson Sutton. Fruit table—William Peterson.

During the evening, there were phonograph selections by the Victor phonograph of Harry C. Fraleigh. Mr. Fraleigh was assisted by E. E. Brown.

of Easton on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, New York and Long Branch and New Jersey Southern systems, which would have to move by way of Easton—in some instances more than double the distance than when moving via Jersey City.

"Consider for a moment what such a circuitous route would mean for traffic to and from the Newark, Elizabethport, Bayonne, Jersey City and Perth Amboy districts; also the business received in connection with the Baltimore and Ohio and the Reading system, connecting with the Jersey Central at Bound Brook. The public have every reason to feel alarmed.

"The New Haven Company states that a part of the traffic involved originates at places which are also accessible to the Pennsylvania and the Lehigh Valley railroads, and that the traffic which formerly moved by the Jersey Central could be moved by one of these other railroads. This is undoubtedly true as, to some traffic, though it would involve hardship and expense to shippers. Take the case of an industry located, say at Elizabeth, Newark, etc., which has switch connection with the Jersey Central; its merchandise could be taken to the Pennsylvania Railroad station. It could only be so taken however, by added expense to the shipper, and the same would be true of New England merchandise received by that shipper over the Pennsylvania.

"Even in cases where the freight facilities of both railroads are equally convenient to shippers, the break of through connection with one route would leave them without competition which shippers want in order to secure the best rates and best service. It would be a step backward for any community which now has service over two railroads to be reduced to service over one.

"The public should see to it that their rights are not violated."

A Benefit Euchre.

Mrs. David T. Kenney, of Rockview avenue, gave a euchre at her home, last night, for the benefit of Mount St. Mary's College. Twenty tables were used and the playing was spirited.

MACFADDEN ADVOCATES PHYSICAL STANDARD

An audience of less than 150 people, including about a dozen women, attended the physical culture entertainment given at the Casino, last night, by Bernarr Macfadden. In connection with his exhibition of poses, showing his remarkable physical development, the exponent of physical culture gave a talk explaining his methods of the development of the body in which he presented some interesting facts.

"The race for gold," said Mr. Macfadden, "has given place to the development of character and body and people today think too little of the importance of caring for their physical nature. The life of our great cities is furnished by the country and it has been demonstrated that this runs out in about the fourth generation owing to the fast pace in which we live. We have a gold standard; we ought to have a physical standard."

The speaker also referred to prudery, showing how this will resolve itself into degeneracy. "Many parents who dislike to acquaint their children with facts they should know while under parental care," said Mr. Macfadden, "are later horrified to learn that they have picked up this knowledge from their companions and in a way that has been harmful to them."

Referring to the absence of children in many families, Mr. Macfadden said that one could walk along Fifth avenue, New York, for many blocks and not see a little one. This condition he ascribed to the fact that children are not wanted in many homes, they are considered a nuisance, something that is to be sadly deplored and is a reflection on the country.

The audience was greatly interested in the physical development of Mr. Macfadden and all were impressed with his methods as being excellent to bring about an improved condition of the mind and body.

Another Adjourned Meeting.

The Common Council will hold its second adjourned meeting for the month on Monday night, December 23, at which time all bills will be paid to close up the accounts for the year.

New Cars Almost Here.

Several new double-truck trolley cars were received at the P. S. C. barns in Dunellen yesterday and it is believed that they will be used on the local lines within a short time.

$110,000 in one building when such a large section of the West End would be left unprovided for. Mr. Marshall now proposes to take the matter up at the next meeting of the Board of Trade for the purpose of having a calm and dispassionate discussion of school needs. Other citizens are joining him in a movement to bring about the erection of two schools instead of the one at Darrow avenue and Essex street, which in reality will be supposed to take the place of the Washington School building which was sold to St. Mary's church.

Mr. Marshall is but one of the hundreds of interested citizens who take the same view.

SOME STATE NEWS BRIEFS.

A moving picture show at Williamstown has been stopped because it used so much electric current that the town was almost in darkness.

Through the generosity of an unidentified friend, the Burlington County Hospital at Mt. Holly is to be provided with an X-ray instrument.

Mayor Curtis Somers, of Linwood, who was defeated for re-election by John C. Steelman, Reform candidate, at the recent election, has filed a protest, alleging fraud, and will ask for a recount of the close vote.

While John Land was working at the Baileytown sawmill a buzz saw so badly mangled three of his fingers that Dr. Day found it necessary to amputate them. Land displayed wonderful nerve, refusing to take an anaesthetic.

Caught between a locomotive and a pile of lumber at a freight station, at Risley, Tuesday, Louis Morton, thirty-three years old, a brakeman at Cedar Brook, was injured internally and removed to Cooper Hospital, Camden.

Ten thousand trout will be placed in the stream running through Moore's meadows, east of Clayton, by Game Warden Moebius, of Williamstown. This stream is the head of Maurice River and is dammed at Franklinville.

Wives and daughters of the members of the Newark Bay Club of Bayonne are planning to take part in a large fair to be held at the clubhouse, foot of West Thirty-third street, the proceeds of which will be devoted to furnishing the building.

Walter Walters, 526 Vine street, Camden, was found in an unconscious condition at Locust and Chestnut streets, Camden, shortly after 1 o'clock Tuesday night. He was taken to the Cooper Hospital, where the physician said he had taken laudanum. They have small hopes of saving his life. Why he should wish to die is not known.

Judge Tuller, of the Cumberland County Court, has set aside the assessment for benefits of paving made by commissioners appointed at the request of the city of Bridgeton. On Water street, that city, in a manufacturing centre, the benefits to property holders were assessed at about fifty per cent. of the entire cost of paving.

Thomas R. Croker, a lightweight pugilist, was drowned Tuesday in a shallow pond at Locust and Atlantic avenues, Camden. During the night he was intoxicated, and, it is believed, wandered into the pond in this condition, and fell face down, and on account of his helpless condition was unable to extricate himself.

Stephen McCawson, thirty-five years old, of Philadelphia, ascertained that kissing and hugging a woman on the street in Atlantic City costs $7.50. He was charged by Policeman Martin with having seized the woman, who screamed, and imprinted a dozen kisses upon her lips despite her struggles to free herself. He is in jail in default of paying the fine.

Attracted to the home of Justice of the Peace Joel W. Cross, at Fourth and Arch streets, Camden, Tuesday, Policeman Wagner, Walter Lee and William Getty found the 'squire unconscious in bed and the wall paper ablaze, having ignited from an upset oil stove. Cross was carried to the street, where he soon recovered, and the blaze was extinguished by the fire department.

NEW DIVORCE LAW.

Persons Must Not Remarry Within Six Months.

The days when parties to a divorce decree might remarry before the Chancellor's signature on the document has had time to dry are almost at an end in New Jersey. With the first of next month, based upon recommendations of the uniform divorce law congress, the new ruling will take effect.

Under this law litigants in contested divorce cases must wait for six months after the court has reached its decision before the final decree of divorce is granted, and parties in uncontested cases must wait a like period for the filing of the master's report.

NEWS IN THE SUBURBS.

SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

Joel Manning and daughter, of Plainfield avenue, have removed to their new home in Plainfield. Their late residence is undergoing complete renovation pending the occupancy by Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Delafield.

Miss Emma Manning, of Lakeside avenue, has recovered from her recent indisposition and is now able to resume her household duties.

William Faulks, of Maple avenue, is assisting his son, Frank Faulks, of Front street, in making improvements at his house.

The children of the public school of South Plainfield will hold their Christmas entertainment in the Baptist church here.

Miss Sadie Randolph, of Plainfield avenue, has just completed a visit with Mrs. Wyckoff, of Westfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Bunting and family, of Piscataway, have now taken up their residence in this village.

The services of Monroe Pyatt have been secured by the public roads committee.

MR. RANSON'S WEDDING AT BALTIMORE TUESDAY

The marriage of Miss Ann Baldwin Passano, daughter of Ferdinand Passano, of Baltimore, and Charles A. Ranson, State political writer for the Newark Evening News, to be celebrated in an Episcopal church, Baltimore, Tuesday at 12 o'clock noon, will be attended by a large number of well-known people in the State as well as Baltimore, where the bride is a social favorite. More than 600 invitations have been issued to the marriage.

Miss Passano will be attended by Mrs. Louis Passano, her sister-in-law, as matron of honor, and J. B. F. Ranson, of Jersey City, a brother of the groom, will be best man. The ushers will include State Senator Everett Colby, of Orange; Louis F. Passano, brother of the bride; Alfred L. Ranson, brother of the groom, who is editor of the North Hudson News; J. Stockett Kent, general freight traffic agent for the Pennsylvania Railroad; Walter Huppman, of Baltimore, assistant traffic manager for the B. and O. Railroad, and Robert V. Hoffman, of Westfield, editor of the Union County Standard, a cousin of the groom.

Trinity's Christmas Entertainment.

The committee in charge of the Christmas entertainment at Trinity Reformed church has secured an especially strong program for that affair to be held at the church on Thursday night, December 26. The committee believes it has been fortunate in securing Charles R. Taggart, known as "The Man from Vermont," who gives descriptive piano selections and songs, recitations and character sketches, ventriloquial dialogues and violin mimicry. In addition, Miss Winifred Carroll, contralto of the Crescent Avenue church choir, and Miss Ethel Moore, formerly soprano of the choir, will favor with vocal numbers. Last year the Sunday-school entertainment was given up on account of the illness of the pastor, Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, but he is so much improved that he may be able to enjoy this year's entertainment.

Veterans Elect Officers.

ATTACKS ELECTROCUTION

Allan H. Strong Contends that the Statute is Unconstitutional and Tells Why.

ARGUES BEFORE ERRORS COURT

In Behalf of Delicco, Says Head Keeper Has No Power to Fig Day of Execution.

Electrocution as a punishment for murder has been threatened by constitutional points raised against this method of inflicting the death punishment by Allan H. Strong, of New Brunswick, in his argument yesterday before the Court of Errors and Appeals at Trenton in the case of Pasquale Delicco, of Middlesex county, who was sentenced to die next week in the electric chair for killing Lugi Tenace. There are four men under sentence of electrocution within the next two weeks, and the raising of these points by Mr. Strong means that the whole scheme of electrocution is threatened.

Mr. Strong contended that the constitution provides that no one of the three distinct branches of the government shall exercise rights in the department in which it is not a part. He instanced the head keeper of the State Prison is an administrative officer, yet the law allows him to fix the date for holding an electrocution within a week specified by the trial judge. He held that in fixing the time within the week the head keeper is exercising judicial functions, and that the Legislature cannot give him that power. When confronted with the old law cited by one of the justices, that under its provisions sheriffs could select the time between 10 and 2 of a specified day during which to conduct a hanging. Mr. Strong replied that the law does not take cognizance of parts of a day.

He also raised the point that the death warrant did not state by which method Delisso was to be put to death, and that the judgment did not so state when it came from the verdict. He held that inasmuch as there was a change in inflicting the death penalty, the sentence should state the method. Counsel for the State held that judicial functions were fully exercised when a week was fixed within which an electrocution should be held.

These points raised by Mr. Strong will likely encourage counsel for Charles Gibson and Stephen Dorsey, of Camden, to ask for reprieves so that they may raise the same points.

Another murder case argued was that of Michael Tomassi, who shot Mrs. Delia Congilio, at Lambertville, with whom he boarded. James M. Tremble, of Newark, appeared for Tomassi, and argued that the conviction should be set aside because the defendant had not been served with a copy of the jury panel and also that private counsel had assisted the prosecutor to the detriment of his client. Prosecutor George K. Large, of Hunterdon county, spoke for the State, and said that Tomassi had been informed of the drawing of the panel and had a right to object had he so chosen.

The court will take up both cases at an early conference and will make an early decision.

JUSTICE ON EXCISE VIOLATIONS.

Hudson Grand Jury Directed to Investigate Gambling and Election Frauds.

Supreme Court Justice Pitney, in his charge to the new December grand jury in Hudson county, yesterday called the attention of the Bishops' law throughout the county, and urged it to bring in indictment against all who disobeyed its provisions. He also called the grand jury's attention to alleged violations of the election law at the last election and to gambling, which, he said, he was informed, was gaining ground throughout the county.

Judges Vail and Parker sat with Justice Pitney on the bench. John Merritt was designated as the foreman of the new grand jury.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Dec. 15: "The straight gate."—Luke xiii, 23-30. "Strive to enter in by the narrow door."

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

Passages for reference—Isa. lv, 6, 7; Matt. v, 20; Phil. iii, 13, 14; II Tim. ii, 4; I John ii, 6.

The proper word here is not straight in the sense of direct or not crooked, but the old English strait or narrow. So the American revised version gives the proper meaning when it translates the passage as "the narrow door."

The whole passage is forceful. The word strive is the same in the Greek as our word agonize. It suggests severe effort, gripping until the knuckles grow white.

Is it, then, so difficult a task to be a follower of Jesus Christ? Is it a work in which strenuous exertion is necessary? That seems so singular when we have heard so much talk of the easiness of the Christian life and the paths of pleasantness and peace. How can these things be reconciled or explained?

Jesus makes it very clear that His way is an exact one. It is narrow. No man can serve two masters. It is not enough to profess to love God. One must do the will of the Father, nothing more, nothing less. God requires all the life, all the love. His claims are exclusive and all inclusive. In a very true sense Paul could call himself the bond servant or slave of Jesus Christ. He will have all or none. Nor can it be otherwise until God nature and man nature shall change utterly. If we are to walk with God we must agree with Him completely. We must keep step with Him. His thought must be our thought, His will our will, His pleasure our joy.

And this is freedom of the highest kind, since it is in this element only our true self can fully develop. As air to lungs so is God's love to our souls. "In Him we live and move and have our being." In this is soul liberty.

Where then is the need of striving if this way of God is what our nature most needs for its good? The call for exertion comes in our immortality. We must learn to use our wings before we can fly. We must learn to walk before we can run with ease and pleasure and safety. And then there is another element which complicates the matter. When we have learned to walk we find in us a perversity which inclines us to want to try some other way than the appointed one.

Call this propensity what you will, depravity, curiosity, self assertion or whatever term you please, the inclination is in every one. It prompts to the opposite course whenever the right and narrow way opens before us. When the command comes, "Thou shalt not eat of it!" this something within us hears, as if it were a voice from without, asking, "Yea, hath God said thou shalt not!" And then it seems good to eat, pleasant to look at and altogether desirable. Every one meets and must meet this experience at some time, somewhere and in some way. Choose we do and must. And here comes the hard work, the striving. Some natures head so strongly away from the narrow door that they must be turned by main strength. Some appetites so clamor for satisfaction that we must grip them by the throat before they will relax their bulldog grip on us. But, at whatever cost it needs, you would best enter the narrow door. Strive then.

Peace Out of War.

Did I ever tell you, among the affecting little things one is always seeing in these battlefields, how on the ground upon which the battle of Bull Run was fought I saw pretty, pure, delicate flowers growing out of the empty ammunition boxes and a wild rose thrusting up its graceful head through the top of the broken Union drum which doubtless sounded its last charge in that battle and a cunning scarlet verbena peeping out of a fragment of an exploded shell, in which strange pot it was planted? Wasn't that peace growing out of war? Even so shall the beautiful and graceful ever grow out of the horrid and terrible things that transpire in this changing but ever advancing world. Nature covers even the battlefields with verdure and bloom. Peace and plenty spring up in the track of devouring campaigns, and all things in nature and society shall work out the progress of mankind.—George Alfred Townsend.

Do It Now.

I expect to pass through this world but once. Any good thing, therefore, that I can do or any kindness that I can show to any fellow human being let me do it now. Let me not defer or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again.—Stephen Grellet.

Beware of This.

A religious life that begins to stay home from church because it is inconvenient to go will end by staying home because it is disagreeable to go.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

Between the Days.

Between the days—the weary days—
He drops the darkness and the dews;
Over tired eyes His hands He lays
And strength and hope and life renews.
Thank God for rest between the days!

Else who could bear the battle stress
Or who withstand the tempest's shocks,
Who thread the dreary wilderness
Among the pitfalls and the rocks,
Came not the night with folded flocks?

The white light scorches, and the plain
Stretches before us, parched with heat;
But, by and by, the fierce beams wane,
And, lo, the nightfall, cool and sweet,
With dews to bathe our aching feet!

For He remembereth our frame!
Even for this I render praise.
Oh, tender Master, slow to blame,
The falterer on life's stormy ways,
Abide with us—between the days!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 15, 1907.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—Confident testimony for Christ.—Luke xii, 11, 12; Acts iv, 13-33.

The supreme mission of the Christian church and its members is to win the world for Christ. His last and supreme command was, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." And this mission is fulfilled largely through the various kinds of confident testimony for Christ. And no one who has had the experience of being saved should neglect to tell to others what he has experienced and what he has seen and heard concerning the conversion of others. Sometimes we may be called upon to testify before or to those who are our superiors. Yet we should not hesitate. If we lack appropriate and wise words, Christ has promised that His spirit will supply the necessary words. Sometimes, as in the case of Peter and John, we may be called upon to testify before those who are hostile to Christianity and may even have the power to do us harm, yet we should not fear. It is "better to obey God rather than man," and therefore we should have no hesitancy in telling our experience.

The most influential factor in winning the Roman world to Christ was confident personal testimony. A few unlearned men had been associated with Him for three years. They had seen His marvelous works, His death upon the cross; knew assuredly that He had been raised from the dead, for they had seen Him after the resurrection. They went about and with deep conviction told what they knew, had seen and heard; others were convinced and converted by the power of the Holy Ghost, and they kept telling these facts to others, and so it continued until the Roman world was largely at the feet of Christ.

Testimony has still a great part to do in the Christianization of the world. (1) Verbal testimony is often of great value, but it is usually more effective when face to face with a single soul, than in a large public meeting. There men are apt to be carried away and after repeating their stories to magnify themselves rather than Christ. But if you know that you have been saved go to some one person who is unsaved and tell him that Christ saved you and can save him, and God will bless your efforts. (2) A consistent Christian life is a testimony for Christ. This is very effective testimony. The inconsistency of professed Christians has greatly injured Christ and Christianity. If we were all more consistent, more consecrated, men would know that we had been with Jesus, and they would want to come to Him too. (3) Church membership is another effective way of testifying for Christ. There we take our stand among Christ's people and say to the world by that act, "I am on the Lord's side," and every time we walk to and from the church we are giving testimony for Christ. If we only realized this, so many of us would not be so irregular in attendance. In these and in any other ways possible let us confess Christ on earth, and He will confess us before His Father who is in heaven.

President of the Alabama C. E. Union.

One of the leading Endeavorers in the United States, the Rev. Claude E. Hill, president of the Alabama Christian Endeavor union, was born on a farm in Pike county, Mo., Jan. 11, 1874. He obtained his education in the public schools, a private normal school and the University of Chicago. For two years he was chaplain of the Missouri house of representatives. Mr. Hill served for four years as Missouri state superintendent of Christian Endeavor for the churches of his denomination, and in October, 1906, he was elected national superintendent of Christian Endeavor for the Disciples of Christ, directing the work of more than 5,000 societies. In addition to this most important task, he was chosen president of the Alabama Christian Endeavor union at the last state convention.

REV. CLAUDE E. HILL.

At Tremendous Odds.

Do you ever realize the tremendous odds the Endeavorers of India, Burma and Ceylon have to face? Will you suffer me to remind you that as I travel through the length and breadth of this great land I am moving among a mass of 300,000,000 people, of whom 200,000,000 are Hindoos and mostly gross idolaters, 61,000,000 are Mohammedans, ignorant and fanatical, and 10,000,000 are Buddhists, spiritually paralyzed by the "religion without a sunrise, a faith devoid of hope." I will not weary you with figures, but cannot refrain from reminding you of two more tragic facts. There are 40,000,000 women secluded in zenanas, and, worst of all, there are 27,000,000 girls and women under the curse of enforced widowhood and all that phrase implies.—Rev. Herbert Hallwell, Field Secretary For India.

A World Training Class.

Christian Endeavor is a great world training class in the expression of the religious life.—Dr. F. E. Clark.

The CASTLE of LIES

BY ARTHUR HENRY VERSEY

(COPYRIGHT, 1906, by D. APPLETON & COMPANY)

"Official Act of Parliament to prevent a Disclosure of Documents and Information: Any person found guilty of a breach of official trust; of purloining or obtaining under false pretenses papers of State, and found guilty of the same, shall be convicted of high treason. Any person interfering with His Majesty's Diplomatic

She Looked About Vaguely, Then Toward the Chateau Walls.

Servants in their official business, either by the giving of false information, the assuming of any of their prerogatives or rights—"

I have never learned the awful fate of a person guilty of these misdemeanors. The book slipped from my hand. Above the clamor of the stream below I had heard a faint shout.

Twice it was repeated. Alarmed, I went to the window and looked down. At first I thought some one had fallen into the river. But the shout had not come from below. I could be sure of this, because on the opposite side of the Aare was a narrow esplanade. Benches were placed at intervals, and there were beds of flowers to break the monotony of the gravel walk. The esplanade was deserted but for one person, a woman, and she was seated, her parasol shielding her from the sun and from my view.

Again I heard the shout, and still again. I listened, breathless. But the mysterious cry was no longer repeated.

Puzzled, I stood at the window, leaning far out, but I could discover sign of no person at such of the windows as I could command. My glance fell idly to the woman sunning herself on the opposite bank. And as I looked, a tiny shaft of light arrested my attention.

It was scarcely larger than my hand, but it seemed endowed with elfish intelligence. For it moved, it danced. And always in the direction of the woman with the parasol.

Now it crawled slowly along the graveled walk in a direct line from the river bank toward her. Now it burned, a shining mark, motionless. Then it darted about in circles, and always close to the woman as if to engage her attention. A minute, five minutes passed, while I watched the eccentric gyrations of this extraordinarily intelligent shaft of light. Over and over its antics were repeated.

The woman's parasol was tilted carelessly back for a moment. The narrow beam of light seized its opportunity. It played fantastically on the dress of the woman. Now at last she had seen it. It flashed upward toward her face. She looked about vaguely, then toward the chateau walls. Now I had seen her face.

It was Helena Brett.

I struck my forehead, impatient at my stupidity. It was Captain Forbes who had shouted. He had seen Helena Brett; he had vainly attempted to make her hear. But the roaring river had drowned his cry. That I had heard it, proved that he was nearer to me than to her. Yes; in this chateau, and a prisoner.

He was signaling that fact to her. Every schoolboy knows the trick. The reflection of the sun's rays on a mirror will carry a tolerable distance.

But now that he had attracted her attention, would she look up and see him? If by chance that were possible, would she understand?

Fascinated, I saw the little beam of light tell its story eloquently and ingeniously.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Startling Message.

She had looked up, only to be blinded by the dancing flame. She held her hands before her eyes. The flame persistently annoyed her. She moved from her seat. It pursued her.

Again she looked up; and even from this height I could see that she was frowning in her anger and annoyance.

She seated herself at another bench. But she could not shake off her tormentor. It no longer beat on her face and person; it moved steadly toward her, then traveled along the path of the promenade; trespassed into the garden of a cottage; shot by the cottage itself; halted at a huge wooden signboard, on which was inscribed a long advertisement in French proclaiming the exalted merits of a Swiss chocolate.

It zigzagged tremulously across the signboard. It paused at a capital letter I.

Helena had watched it curiously until it disappeared into the garden. Then she had lost interest in its movements, and had once more scanned anxiously the chateau opposite.

Patiently and persistently the little beam of light repeated its antics. Again it moved, swiftly this time, to the signboard. And now she turned in her seat and watched it until it again paused at the letter I.

Twice the mirror was flashed on the billboard; twice it pased at the letter I. It disappeared, to reappear at A. From A it darted swiftly to M. Another pause and again it vanished. Once more it pointed to A; once more it vanished.

When it climbed the signboard again, it wandered vaguely about as if seeking a letter. After some hesitation the mirror's reflection fell on P. Thence it shot to R. Again it hesitated, but it last settled on I. Once more it selected S. Thence in quick succession came O, N, E, R.

"I AM A PRISONER," it had spelled.

But while Helena and I were still staring at the board, the shaft of light darted in feverish haste from letter to letter until it had spelled another word:

"F-O-R-B-E-S."

The king's messenger had been an English officer, and one of the first military duties a boy learns at Sandhurst or Woolwich is heliographing. When, therefore, Captain Forbes had seen Helena across the river and had realized the futility of his shouting, being a man of wit and resource he had told of the imprisonment in this happy method.

He had flashed his message successfully. Helena understood. She looked upward toward the chateau, nodded excitedly, and again eagerly watched the signboard. She was not to be disappointed. The message was not quite complete. These two words were added:

"G-E-T H-E-L-P."

Helena made a gesture of comprehension, and walked rapidly in the direction of the village.

And when she had summoned assistance? When the castle was stormed, as it were, by gendarmes? My own peril would be extreme.

It was hopeless to prevent the inevitable. The rescue of Captain Forbes would be accomplished; my complicity in the intrigues of Dr. Starva and Madame de Varnier would be taken for granted. Expostulations would be useless. My very presence in the chateau would be face evidence of my guilt.

And so I had played my desperate game to no purpose.

To save myself—that was my one thought. Two courses lay before me. Could I make my way to Captain Forbes? Could I effect his release before Helena returned with help? If that were possible, and if I could hastily make my position clear to the king's messenger all might yet be well. At least so far as the establishment of my innocence was concerned.

Or I might overtake Helena Brett. To her I might make my confession. And if she were persuaded, not only that I was acting in her interests, but that my plan to clear up Sir Mortimer's disappearance promised success, I might even now be successful.

It was my fear that she would scornfully refuse both to believe my story and to accept my aid that made me hesitate as to this course.

It was Dr. Starva who decided for me.

He had appeared on the terrace below, and he was following Helena Brett.

I had read Captain Forbes's message as well as Helena. Why, then, could there not have been a third person interested in the strange antics of the mirror? And if this surmise were true? If Dr. Starva or Madame de Varnier had read the message? They had not hesitated to use desperate expedients to gain their purpose. Would Dr. Starva hesitate to use means as desperate to prevent Helena from summoning help?

I asked myself this startling question as I took the stairs two at a time to the great hall. The main entrance was locked. For a moment I thought that I was a prisoner in the chateau as well as Captain Forbes. Even now I am not certain that such was not the intention of Madame de Varnier. But Dr. Starva had gained the terrace by a small door close by the spiral staircase. In his haste he had forgotten to lock this door.

Desperate as was my own haste I took the precaution of locking the side door after me and placing the key in my pocket. My reasons for this were vague enough. It was an instinct that prompted me to take the precaution rather than deliberate reflection. But perhaps I might be able to regain the chateau in due time by this side entrance, and none be the wiser. For as far as I knew I had effected my exit unobserved.

In the meanwhile I ran swiftly after Helena and Dr. Starva. I had lost sight of both. I soon came to an end of the promenade. It led directly into the main street of the village. Now that I had gained the village street I looked eagerly about for them. Neither was in sight. I guessed that Helena Brett would make her way as soon as possible to the hotel where she was known. What hotel? That was the question.

I halted an urchin and asked him the name of the best hotel in Alterhoffen. "Oh the Grand hotel," he answered without hesitation; "that is where all the English lords and American millionaires stay."

Then let him take me hither; I tempted him with a franc.

"Evidently the gentleman is in a hurry."

I assured him that I was, and promised him two francs if I could reach the hotel before a lady whom I was following.

"Then, the gentleman must go by the short cut."

I sped after the urchin down the village street.

This street is one of the most quaint in the whole world. There are two stories of shops on either side. The pavement of the shops below is roofed over; this covered passageway is the pavement for the second series of shops above. I was on the lower pavement, and this explains how I was able to reach a flight of steps, the cut the youngster had promised, before Helena or Dr. Starva.

At the foot of these steps the youngster bolted, assuring me that I should find the hotel when I had reached the top of the flight.

These steps pierced a wall of one of the houses of the village street. The flight was straight for the first 20 or so, then it turned curiously on a little landing at right angles. Here I was in semi darkness. I groped my way for the continuance of the flight. The first series of steps, I began to see dimly, had ended at a sort of porter's lodge. I learned afterwards that this was a private entrance to the hotel above and that in the glass-covered little room a porter was accustomed to sit.

I was still feeling my way cautiously about (for I had not yet seen that the flight of steps was continued at right angles, and the steps were broken and uneven), when the circle of light at the foot of the steps leading into the street was blotted out.

At first I hoped it might be Helena. But it was a man, and he was leaping up the steps in desperate haste.

I guessed it to be Dr. Starva. But I had no intention of letting him know that I was following him. I pressed close against the wall to let him pass.

To my astonishment he darted into the empty porter's lodge and crouched down in the gloom. I held my breath, watching, hardly an arm's length from where he stood motionless.

Again the circle of light was blotted out. A woman was rapidly ascending the steps. I could hear her catching her breath. It was Helena on her way to the hotel for aid.

And now I am forced to a confession that will deepen the sympathy or contempt felt for me when I related the tragedy at the beginning of my narrative. But I have determined to make myself no hero.

For now again came that curious paralysis of will. Again, as in the tragedy of the Alps, horror robbed me for the moment of power to act instantly. I had caught the glint of steel. I knew that Helena was doomed unless I hurled myself instantly on the treacherous assassin.

I did indeed fling myself headlong on him, but only after he had fired. There was a crash of shattered glass; the shot of his revolver was still echoing in the stairway as I grappled with him.

It Was an Unequal Struggle.

It was an unequal struggle. I felt Dr. Starva's hairy hands close about my throat and I was hurled backward.

Tries Suicide, Flees Hospital.

Emily Brown, who lives in Thompson's lane, Elizabeth, attempted to commit suicide Monday night by taking carbolic acid. She was removed to the Elizabeth General Hospital in an ambulance, while her husband, Charles Brown, was taken into custody as a witness. During the night she made her escape from the institution, and returned to her home, where the police found her and locked her up. Yesterday morning in police court she was arraigned and committed to the county jail for a medical examination.

The attention of renters of Safe Deposit boxes in New York is called to the fact that New York State levies a tax on the contents of the Safe Deposit box of a non-resident at his or her death, which tax may, of course, be avoided by keeping one's valuables in the same State in which one resides. It is, therefore, greatly to the advantage of a resident of New Jersey to keep personal property in a Safe Deposit box within the State.

P.H.S. BASKETBALL TEAM WIN FROM SENIORS, 57-12

Playing fifty-seven different varieties of fast basketball in different goemetric shapes all around their opponents, the Plainfield High School basketball team defeated a picked five from the senior class in a one-sided game played at the school gymnasium yesterday afternoon by a score of 57-12. In the lead all the time, the school team showed its strength by some good passing and brilliant shooting and clinched the game in the first half.

The team has only been organized for practise about two weeks, but with much of last year's material remaining, have already hit a fast pace in the game and should make good in the league games for the local interscholastic championship. Yesterday's play showed up some good new material, and the school five worked their signals successfully against the opposing combination. The teams lined up as follows:

P. H. S.—Caldwell (captain), Mortimer and Wilcox, forwards; Parsons and Morris, centre; Doane, Loizeaux and Robbins, guards. Class of 1908—Hammond (captain), Pound and Titsworth, forwards; Lounsbury and Foster, centre; Kahn, Schofield and Murphey, guards.

Referee, Paul Collier. Timer, Stanley Karner. Twenty minute halves.

The school team will open its regular season with a game with the North Plainfield High School five in the interscholastic league next Tuesday afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium. Saturday, December 21, the local school five will play the team from the Stuyvesant High School, of New York, at the school gymnasium here. The Stuyvesant school team claim the metropolitan scholastic title, so the Plainfielders will have a hard game at the start of their season.

CHURCH ATHLETIC LEAGUE IN TRACK MEET TOMORROW

Athletes from the local churches represented in the Sunday-school Athletic League will compete for cups and medals at the Y. M. C. A. tomorrow night, when the annual indoor track meet of the league will be held. The events will be in two classes, seniors and juniors, the seniors to be those contestants over 120 pounds in weight. An appropriately engraved silver cup will be awarded to the church having the largest total number of points in the senior events and a similar cup will be given to the winning junior team. A gold medal will be given the athlete winning the greatest number of points in the senior events, a silver medal to the one having the next greatest number, and a bronze medal to him who has the third highest number of points. In the junior events, a silver medal will be given to the winner of the mostp oints and a bronze medal to the athlete who has the second best total.

There are seven churches in the league, the First Baptist, First Presbyterian, First Methodist, Hope chapel, Warren chapel, Congregational, and Trinity Reformed. In the senior events, about sixty entries have been received so far, and about thirty have already entered for the junior events. The senior events will be the standing broad jump, running high jump, 400-yard potato race, sack race, two standing broad jumps, and three-legged race. The seniors will also have a tug of war, between five men teams, members over twenty-five years of age.

N.P.H.S. WINS FIRST GAME IN DEBELE HALL

In the first basketball game played in Debele Hall, the old Warren chapel building, the North Plainfield High School five defeated the Holy Cross Club team by a score of 33-17 last night. There was a good attendance, and after the game there was an inspection of the hall, the use of which has been given to the borough school by the owner, William G. Debele.

The borough five had things all their own way and were always in the lead. They excelled their opponents in passing and shooting, but the church club team, only recently organized, put up a hard fight for the game, though they were outclassed by the school boys. The teams lined up as follows: N. P. H. S.—Conroy, left guard; Overton and Steiner, right forward; Byron McClintock, centre; Fred McClintock, right guard; Herman, left guard. Holy Cross Club—Gray, left forward; Allen Overton, right forward; Miller, centre; George Webster, left guard; Bristol, right guard. Twenty minute halves were played.

BOWLING.

The Park Club five will roll the Roselle Casino at Roselle Tuesday night.

The Park Club's score of 985 made against Elizabeth Tuesday night is quite likely to remain for sometime the highest in the Central Journal Bowling League tournament, and it is likely that Edwin Daniel's score of 244 made in the same match, the highest of the season, will remain untouched awhile.

P. H. S. Hockey Team Meets.

At a meeting of the candidates for the Plainfield High School hockey team held yesterday at the school, Charles Loizeaux, captain of the football team, was elected temporary captain of the hockey team. There were fifteen players at the meeting, and it was decided to begin regular practise as soon as the ice gets formed. The team will again use Hyde's pond for practise and play, as last year. The team loses two members by graduation, Douglass and Van Deventer, and it is probable that Chauncey Murphey will not be in the game regularly this season on account of a bad ankle.

JILTED YOUNG WOMAN ASKS $10,000 BALM

A great stir was caused at Lakewood yesterday by the discovery that Sheriff Jeffrey had served papers in a $10,000 breach of promise damage suit upon Dr. Alexander M. Heron, one of the most prominent and popular physicians of Ocean county. The fair accuser is Miss Ellie E. Pettit, bright and pretty daughter of a well-known resident.

Dr. Heron is secretary of the Ocean County Medical Society, has among his patients some of the wealthiest residents of the county and is frequently called by the fashionable folk of the metropolis who spend the winter among the pines at Lakewood. He is up in sports, and is popular with the young set. It is known that he had paid considerable attention to Miss Pettit, and gossips had it that they were engaged to wed, but nothing "official" ever came out to that effect.

However, the damage suit is likely to bring out a lot of information, for which the residents are looking anxiously. Dr. Heron has engaged counsell and will fight the suit. Whether he claims to have never promised to wed the fair plaintiff is not yet revealed, as he has made no statement.

Miss Pettit, who is represented by Attorney R. Ten Broeck Stout, asserts that she was wooed with all the conventionalties and won with all the spirit of modern lovemaking; that she consented to become the physician's bride and was looking forward to the glad day, when her lover's ardor cooled and he decided that there would be "no wedding bells for him." As he failed to keep his promise, even after her tearful admonitions, she decided to seek redress in the law.

World Punish Nurse's Employer.

Miss Olga Sjostedt, the trained nurse from Asbury Park who insists she was kept a prisoner for twelve days by T. E. Pender, ten miles from Halifax, N. C., was brought home yesterday by Detective Thomas Broderick, who went South on Saturday to investigate the woman's story. Broderick says he found Miss Sjostedt locked in a room in a hovel occupied by Pender, who owns a plantation of twelve hundred acres. She insists that her employer kept her virtually a prisoner and provided only the scantiest food. Miss Sjostedt is now at the home of Mrs. Henry Lange at Asbury Park. Her friends say they will see to it that Pender is prosecuted.

ADVOCATE DIRECT GIVING

Local Charity Organization Society Hears Scheme to Raise Subscriptions.

PLAN FOR FEDERATED GIVING.

As Practised in Orange Endorsed by Local Society at Annual Meeting Last Night.

Advocating a system of direct contribution for the support of local charities through a centrally organized charity aid association, composed of members of the general societies, Isaac C. Ogden and W. H. Aborn, of Orange, read papers on the success of this scheme of charity support as it is used in their home city before the members of the local Charity Organization Society at their annual meeting held in the Plainfield High School auditorium last night.

About fifty members of the society were present and the points suggested by the papers were discussed informally in a round table quiz at the conclusion of the regular business meeting. The "direct giving" system is strongly supported by the local organization because of the feeling that a single aggregate appeal for charity is a more convenient way than periodic appeals by the various charity organizations, and is more likely to meet with the support of the giver.

"Organized charity support," said Mr. Aborn, "puts charity on a sane business system. There are so many expenses to meet in conducting charity entertainments that the receipts—what the people really give for charity—are in a large measure used up in meeting the expenses of the affair, and the net proceeds are very small in many cases. It seems that those who support charity have a choice between this business basis and placing the matter in the hands of municipal control by putting the problem of local charity support directly up to the taxpayers.

"Federated giving means education to the public, municipal control means the elimination of all the personal element in giving—the elimination of that spirit of human sympathy characteristic of the American people. If the public are directly appealed to for financial support of local charity, the money goes directly to the object, without any deductions for expenses, as in the case when fairs and entertainments are held. This takes less money, saves an infinite amount of work, not only by the charity organization in conducting the entertainment but by the benevolent public who must patronize the affair, and by the aggregation of the amount to be given by those who support charity, avoids the many appeals for charity, many times so exasperating to a would-be donor."

Outlining the plan as it is practise in Orange, the visiting charity workers showed that the charity finance system of direct contribution is made through a single central body, composed of delegates from all the organized aid societies in the city. This brings the workers and the work together, stimulating the charitable, educational and philanthropic services and securing money co-operation and personal work for the cause. It further secures the united support of all charitable organizations of the city, for the association works for the object of all, and a donor may specify his especial charity when he gives to the general organization. The general organization of Orange is composed of delegates from the thirty charitable societies of the city, many of which were not self-supporting before the system was inaugurated. Entertainments did not furnish a steady source of support and proved a waste of the donors' money in meeting expenses, so that the direct appeal system, making a single appeal and utilizing all the money secured, has proved the means of putting charity giving on a business basis. The public appreciate the fact that they are giving direct to charity, and the regularly supplying the necessary $75,000 annually for the support of the work.

At the conclusion of the informal quiz regarding various points of the Orange system, in which members of the local organization kept the visitors busy answering questions giving statistics, President Hugh F. Fox urged the local society to consider the scheme outlined carefully with a view toward its adoption in Plainfield, and on motion of Dr. W. H. Murray, it was unanimously voted to have the papers tendered by the Orange visitors incorporated in the report and files of the local society, and the plan outlined received as a recommendation to the chairman and general committee of trustees.

The business meeting, preceeding the reading of the papers, included the report of the various officers of the organization. Miss Mabel Pierson read the report of the Relief

FORMER CONSUL IS DEAD

Rev. W. T. Griffin, for Years U. S. Representative at Limoges, Passes Away.

REFORMED CHURCH MINISTER.

Appointed By President Cleveland to Post In France—Wife and Daughter Survive Him.

Rev. Walter T. Griffin, for many years U. S. Consul to Limoges, France, and a resident of this city, died this morning at the home of his New York physician. Death come after an illness of four weeks with typhoid-pneumonia, contracted while he was in Europe on business. He was started on his way home as soon as he was stricken but on reaching New York his condition was such that he could be taken no further and was hurried to the doctor's residence. He had been sinking steadily for the past few days and members of his family were at his bedside constantly.

Mr. Griffin was born in New York State in 1850 and entered Rutgers College in the class of 1875. He was a classmate of Arthur L. Titsworth, of this city, Dr. A. V. V. Raymond and Dr. J. P. Searle, now dean of the seminary. He completed his theological course in 1878 and in the early part of his ministry was stationed for many years in New York State and latterly was pastor of a large Reformed congregation in Brooklyn. Failing health compelled him to leave the pulpit and during President Cleveland's second term he was appointed consul to Limoges. He discharged the duties of the office in such a satisfactory manner that succeeding presidents called upon him to remain.

He held the office until about a year ago and then resigned in order to promote an invention of his own for the converting of certain turf into fuel. He was in Plainfield until three months ago and then sailed for Europe to investigate the peat industry and also to interest capitalists in his venture. He was in Switzerland when the fatal illness first asserted itself.

Mr. Griffin's home was on East Seventh street and he made many trips backward and forward from Plainfield to Limoges. His family have always been attendants at Trinity Reformed church and when in town he accompanied them, frequently occupying the pulpit. His preaching was greatly appreciated by the congregation. He was a member of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum.

Surviving him are his wafe and one daughter, Mrs. Carles Clark, who lives at the Seventh street home. The body will be brought to Plainfield but as yet no arrangements have been made for the funeral.

CENTRAL LODGE ELECTS OFFICERS AND ENJOY SMOKER

Central Lodge, No. 48, Ancient Order United Workmen, in connection with a smoker held last night, elected officers for the ensuing year which will be installed on January 9. The lodge also received and accepted an invitation to the installation and anniversary celebration of Memorial Lodge, No. 63, of Newark, on January 8. These officers were elected last night:

Past Master Workman, Robert W. Ellis; master workman, Henry B. Zimmerman; foreman, Andrew J. Stiglitz; overseer, Charles L. Holstein; guide, Isaac E. Houston; recorder, Harvey R. Thorn; financier, William Newcorn; receiver, Charles H. Randolph; inside watchman, Edward M. Mosher; outside watchman, Walter Bradford; trustee, two years, William H. Lunger; representatives to Grand Lodge, William Newcorn, Robert W. Ellis; alternates, Harvey R. Thorn, Theodore J. Mason; organist, Theodore J. Mason.

Pavement Work Stopped Until Spring

The brick paving process as thus far planned will be finished on Watchung avenue, today, when the pavement outside the trolley tracks will be grouted. The pavement on West Front street was grouted yesterday afternoon and the city street gang was engaged in cleaning up that thoroughfare for the winter. The work will be completed in the spring according to the provisions of the contract. Probably the least satisfactory job thus far done is on West Front street where the bricks have been laid between the westbound trolley tracks. It was all hurried to such an extent that parts of it had to be relaid.

MR. FOX ON CHILD LABOR

Plainfielder as President of State Board of Guardians Delivers Address.

SOME COMPREHENSIVE FACTS.

Child Labor Law of New Jersey Good But Is Sadly Needs Enforcements, He Declares.

Hugh F. Fox, of this city, president of the State Board of Children's Guardians and chairman of the New Jersey State committee of the national committee of child labor, gave a most comprehensive talk on the question of "Child Labor" at the regular weekly meeting of the Conference of Friendly Visitors in the Newark Free Public Library yesterday morning.

Mr. Fox told of what had been accomplished in procuring legislation bearing on the problem of child labor, particularly that of abolishing night labor for the boys and girls in the glass industries of South Jersey. He said that the general code governing child labor in New Jersey was good, but that a more rigid enforcement of the law was required. He explained that people whom the law affected did not appreciate its value, for instead of being a menace to them it was really the foundation of the making of better and more valuable citizens, since it kept the child at school to develop the mind, and in the playground, where better physical results would be obtained.

Miss Mary Van Lear, one of the New Jersey factory inspectors working in this district, told of conditions as she saw them in the department stores at this season. She said she found as many as twenty-five boys under 16 years of age working in the stores, to say nothing of the number of girls, and that she was sure many under 14 were also employed.

She said the department of labor could hardly be held responsible; that the blame belonged to the department of education, since many of the cases are not reported to the truant officers. She urged the members to report such cases as come to their notice.

In the discussion which followed the speakers it was voted to work for better local conditions in the matter of medical inspection in the public schools and the enforcement of the law which prohibits children under 16 years working in mercantile establishments later than 7 o'clock at night, with the exception of one night at week, and from December 15 to 25, inclusive, until 10 o'clock.

WAL-EL-WARD'S LECTURE ON THE "HOLY LAND."

Under the auspices of the Young People's Society of the First Baptist church, Dr. Wal-el-Ward, who so greatly delighted the Men's Club last Monday evening, will give one of his lectures at the church Sunday night at 7:45 o'clock. This talk on "The Holy Land" will be not only entertaining but religiously instructive. Dr. Ward will make use of about 100 fine stereopticon views.

This remarkable man was formerly connected with the British Museum as an expert in deciphering cuneiform inscriptions and Egyptian hieroglyphs. He speaks fluently many languages and has for many years been a distinguished lecturer in every quarter of the globe. Although an Israelite by birth, he belongs to a tribe which was early separated in religion from the mass of the Jewish nation, and became known as Karaites—rejecting oral tradition, and denying the authority of the Talmud. Dr. Ward has long been an earnest Christian. The public is invited to the lecture and all seats will be free.

Granville-Smith Lecture-Concert.

J. Granville-Smith, recently of London, England, will be at the Plainfield High School tomorrow evening and will discuss the art of extemporization, illustrating his lecture by original extemporizations on the piano on suggested themes in imitation of the styles of the various great composers. He will discuss the form of musical compositions, illustrating at the piano how they may be based on a single theme or on contrasting themes. Dr. Leonard Waldo, of West Eighth street, will render selections on the 'cello. The entertainment will be one of a course being given to raise money for the new tel-electric piano player recently purchased by the pupils of the school.

ELKS COMPLETING PLANS FOR MINSTRAL SHOW

At the regular meeting of Plainfield Lodge, No. 885, B. P. O. E. Wednesday night, Exalted Ruler George O. Stevens appointed the remaining members of the committee to arrange the second annual minstrel show. Those previously serving were John H. Cose, Joseph Noonan and L. A. Bellis and the additions are E. C. Westcott, Harry MacDonald, S. P. T. Wilbur and Samuel Cunningham. Judge William N. Runyon will act as coach and he will select his own assistants to get the chorus in shape.

Though no definite date has been arranged, it has practically been decided not to give the show until the latter part of March. The lodge is at present busy with its annual Christmas affairs and a number of attractions are being prepared by other organizations that will be given early in the coming year. The extra time will also allow the Elks to produce a finished performance and present it at a time more opportune.

Plainfield Aerie of Eagles has also planned to conduct a minstrel benefit on March 7 and has secured John W. Vogel's big company for the purpose. The arrangements are being made by a company composed of Horace Adams, E. C. Searing and Hugh Reilly.

FRANKLIN COUNCIL AS HOST OF NEWARK JUNIORS

Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., acted as host for a large delegation from Marcus L. Ward Council, No. 205, of Newark, last night, and incidentally entertained a large number of its local friends. The feature of the program provided for the occasion was a repetition of the minstrel first part given by Franklin's own troupe at the Casino last week. Clarence Rittenhouse was in his former position as interlocutor and the end men and chorus remained the same. The only additional number in the solo parts was one contributed by George Rittenhouse, "That's What the Rose Said to Me."

At periods during the evening, addresses were made by members of the two councils and at the close of the program refreshments were served. The reception was arranged by the minstrel troupe in co-operation with Franklin's Good and Welfare Committee, of which Roy DeCamp is chairman. The Newark delegation was highly pleased with the treatment accorded them and an invitation was extended the black-face artists to repeat the show in Newark.

Celebrated Silver Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Atkins, of West Fourth street, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding, last night, when a large number of relatives and friends gathered to join in the festivities of the occasion. The home was appropriately decorated for the celebration and a number of features combined to make it very enjoyable. Mr. and Mrs. Atkins received many useful handsome gifts; also the congratulations of the company. During the evening an elaborate supper was served.

Fair Netted $180 for the Chapel.

The fair and bazaar held December 5, 6 and 7 for the benefit of Marconnier chapel at Oak Tree, netted $180, which is most gratifying to those who arranged the affair and had it in charge.

Tax Collections Are Good.

Tax Collector William R. Townsend reports collections to be very good, considering the recent upset in financial conditions. While some of the heaviest taxpayers have paid their taxes for the year there are many, it is believed, who will not do so before December 20, the time limit prescribed by law, and then it is possible that a number will wait until the first of the year even though they will be obliged to pay the interest for the delay.

Frederick Bishoff Owing Bills Can't Have His Wife's Furniture Levied on.

WIFE ASSERTS HER RIGHTS.

Mrs. Bishoff's Testimony Convinces Jury In Long Case Before Justime Snape In Borough Yesterday.

A claim of Mrs. Annie Lozier for rent and a claim of a local grocery firm for an account unpaid, levied upon furniture and household goods of the Bishoff family, who formerly occupied a house on South avenue and ran an account at the grocery store, took up three hours of time yesterday afternoon at Boice's Hotel on Somerset street before Justice Snape before the jury finally decided that Mrs. Bishoff was the personal owner of the furniture and her husband had no right to sell it to pay his back rent and grocers' bill. The hearing attracted a large crowd of boroughites and was enlivened by personal remarks between the lawyers retained in the case, affording an opportunity for the Blatz-Swackhamer feud to break out again in verbal encounter. Francis J. Blatz represented Mrs. Frieda Bishoff, W. L. Hetfield, Sr., was counsel for Mrs. Lozier, and S. S. Swackhamer supported the grocers' claim. With the judgment rendered for his client, Lawyer Blatz departed in triumph at shortly before 6 o'clock.

Mrs. Lozier, the landlady, being two months in arrears for rent of the house occupied by the Bishoffs on South avenue, distrained for the amount due her, and in the name of the husband, Frederick Bishoff, levied upon the furniture of the family, which, since they have been boarding, is in Hand's storage barns. The grocers, with an unpaid account totalling $125, retained Lawyer Swackhamer in an effort to realize on the same furniture. Shortly after 3 o'clock, with Justice Snape on the bench, and a six man jury headed by Andrew Lutkins, as foreman, in the box, the case was called.

Mrs. Frieda Bishoff, fair and buxom, supported her rights with vigor to the court, producing proofs that the furniture in question was her personal property, given her by her mother before she married Frederick Bishoff, some five years ago, and purchased with her own money since then. The problem of back rent and unpaid grocers' bill came home to the couple when Mr. Bishoff broke his arm, some months ago and was without work for a time. Landlady and grocer supported their claims to the levy by statements of Mr. Bishoff, given out when he was "struck" for the money, that they need have no fear, for the furniture and household goods which he alleged belonged to him, were good security of a tangible nature in Hand's storage barns.

But when the creditors attempted to realize on the furniture Mrs. Bishoff developed strong "woman's rights" characteristics, and coming to the witness stand, displayed storehouse receipts from this city and New York, showing that the goods were in her name, and refusing to allow her coin-shy husband to realize on her personal property. W. L. Hetfield and Judge Hezekiah Hand testified to the husband's verbal claim on the furniture, but after the jury had been out about twenty minutes, they reported that Mrs. Bishoff was in the right and the creditors would have to look elsewhere for their money. Those who composed the jury were Andrew Lutkins, foreman; Isaac Dayton, George Nischwitz, Patrick Kiely, Joel Hedden and Lawrence Fahn.

Dr. Schenck at Consistory.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Consistory of Trinity Reformed church, last night, routine business was transacted and Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, the pastor, was able to be present, and occupied his chair as president, much to the joy of his fellow-workers, after an absence, by illness, of just one year. Dr. Schenck spoke very tenderly to his fellow-workers, in which he regretted his forced absence and thanked them and the congregation for their loyalty to the church during the past year and expressing the hope that he will soon be able to take up his full duties as pastor.

Entertained Friends.

Robert Cuzen, of West End avenue, entertained a number of friends at his home in an informal way, last night. During the evening the young men in attendance organized a "secret" society to be known as the U. R. C. Those who enrolled as members were Robert Cuzen, Frank Rimmer, Allen Snyder, James Kenney, Morris Hunter, Donald Mortimer and Peter C. Sweeney.

ENDORSED FOR ASSESSOR

City Committee Names H. C. Van Emburgh, W. T. Kirk and H. C. Runyon.

OPPOSITION TO MR. C. H. HAND.

Second Ward Delegation Gets a Week In Which to Decide Upon a Candidate for Hand's Position.

In response to a request of Mayor Charles J. Fisk for its recommendations, a conference of the City Republican Committee was held at the Casino, last night, for the purpose of receiving suggestions and the endorsement of that body of candidates for positions on the Board of Assessors and for overseer-of-the-poor. The committee endorsed the candidacy of Assessor H. C. Van Emburgh in the First ward; William T. Kirk in the Third ward to succeed Assessor Joseph A. Hubbard, who retires January 1, after a service of many years; Assessor H. C. Runyon in the Fourth ward; Alex. Ayres was endorsed for re-appointment as overseer-of-the-poor.

It occasioned no great surprise when the representatives of the Second ward refused to endorse Assessor Charles H. Hand for re-appointment. They said that they were not prepared at that time to offer a candidate, but that they would not approve Mr. Hand. On its request the delegation was given a week in which to name a candidate for the office. The fact was recognized by Mr. Hand's friends last night that while they might make a stand for his re-appointment they declared today that it would result in an open fight in the committee and would be an unwise action.

The selection of former Sheriff William T. Kirk to succeed Mr. Hubbard was a surprise as many thought the plum would go to Harry B. MacDonald, who, it is said, was picked for the position a year ago when Mr. Hubbard first wanted to retire. The only other candidate from the Third ward, mentioned last night, was former Sheriff B. Frank Coriell. He received five scattering votes from the twenty-one members of the committee present. Mr. Kirk received fifteen votes and accordingly was given the endorsement of the committee.

There was no opposition to Overseer-of-the-Poor Alex Ayres and some complimentary things were said as to the satisfactory way in which he has looked after his department during his term of office.

Mayor Fisk, in explaining why he had called the conference, said that he is an organization man and believed in recognizing its wishes but that he believed that politics should not enter into the appointment of assessors and similar officers. He had decided to ask for suggestions and the endorsement of candidates for the positions to be filled. He also said that at the suggestion of the Second ward representatives the time for presenting a candidate for the position of assessor would be left open one week and in the meantime he would welcome applications for the place from prospective candidates or their friends.

The name of Lewis G. Timpson was presented to the committee as a successor to Mr. Hand, but inasmuch as he is a Democrat, he was not considered as an available candidate. However, it was explained that Mr. Timpson is not a Democrat in city affairs.

The members of the city committee from the Second ward are as follows: Frederick W. Butler, Howard C. Tracy, F. W. Hanaford, Robert H. McCready, R. Henry Depew, F. L. Holt and William R. Townsend.

Ponds to Close for Two Weeks.

The Pond Machine Tool Works will close down Friday night, December 20, not to reopen until Monday, January 6. It is believed that by that time there will be better business prospects. One day this week, for the first time in the history of the oldest employe, not a single order was received at the works, not even one for repairs in the blacksmith shop. Business has been slack at the works for several months past, that is orders have been dropping off, but it is thought there will be a change for the better early in the New Year.

Doyle's Three Day Term Up.

Joseph Doyle, who was arrested with Julia Saueracher on Willow avenue, Sunday afternoon, was freed yesterday after serving three days' time in the borough jail in default of the $3 imposed by Borough Recorder Dolliver.

GEOLOGIST ON HIS JOB

Prof. Kummel in His Official Report Gets After a Local Cement Concern.

A WARNING TO INVESTORS.

Its Much Advertised Survey Report Furnished By a Local Man Is Most Sharply Attacked By State Geologist.

Professor Kummel, State Geologist of New Jersey, is getting after stock jobbing companies whose widely circulated publications about cement are alleged to be untrue, particularly among those which claim large deposits of cement but which actually show small profits, according to a dispatch in the New York Herald. This dispatch states that:

"One of the most successful of these schemes will be described in the forthcoming annual report of the State Geologist, in which he will call attention to 'the highly colored circulars of the get-rich-quick variety extolling the Portland cement industry as the means par excellence for acquiring wealth.'

The growth of this industry within the last few years has been prodigious, especially in the Lehigh district, comprising Warren county, New Jersey, and Eastern Pennsylvania, where the output has increased from 201,000 barrels in 1890 to 22,784,613 barrels in 1906. This marvellous growth is made the basis and alluring bait for promoting the sale of the stock of fraudulent Portland cement companies. Heretofore, the report says, this industry has been free from the stock selling companies which have been the curse of the mining industry.

"There are indications, however," it continues, "that this immunity no longer exists, for within the last six months an elaborate and extravagantly worded circular has reached this office, 'promoting' a new Portland cement company near Carpentersville, this State. Much emphasis is said upon extracts of one of the survey reports, which are quoted at length, and which relate to the occurrence of cement rock near Carpentersville and its chemical composition. In order that there may be no misapprehension regarding these statements, it is proper to point out that, while there is no question as to the occurrence of cement rock at the locality mentioned, the analysis quoted were not made by the State Geologist or by any member of the survey staff, nor were the rock samples which the analysis represent collected by any member of the survey, but, as stated in the original report and as quoted in this circular, they were furnished to the survey by a Plainfielder, who then owned the property. The State Geologist has no reason to question the reliability of these analyses, but he has no actual knowledge regarding the truth.

"While there is no disputing the extraordinary growth of the Portland cement business during the last few years, and while it is to be presumed that it has not been conducted wholly at a loss, nevertheless, prospective investors should bear in mind some facts which are well recognized by all authorities in this industry."

The report then proceeds to show that the capacity of the Portland cement plants is far in excess of the present output; that the capital needed to start successfully a 2,000-barrel a day plant is $1,000,000; that the promise in the circular referred to of "clean profit of sixty cents on each barrel manufactured" is a gross exaggeration; that the present selling price at the mill in Warren county is about ninety-five cents, although some sales have been made at lower figures; that whenever the net price of cement (exclusive of the package, freights, &c.) reaches eighty cents a barrel at the mill, some of the mills in the Lehigh district sell at an actual loss; that during 1904 and 1905 the margin or profit of one large mill was only three and four cents per barrel, with nothing allowed for depreciation of the plant. "It can be accepted as certain, therefore," this part of the report concludes, "that all claims of net profits of sixty cents per barrel are grossly exaggerated, if not wilfully fraudulent."

The Carpentersville concern is largely controlled in this city, its principal officers being well known Plainfielders.

PECULIAR PROPERTIES OF NEW MEDICINE

Cooper Preparation Attracts Widespread Attention by Expelling Internal Parasites.

The interest created in leading cities during the past year by young Mr. Cooper with his new preparation, is largely accounted for by a peculiar quality possessed by this medicine, which he calls his New Discovery.

Mr. Cooper believes that internal parasites, or tapeworms, are responsible for much ill health, and it is an undoubted fact that his medicine has expelled immense numbers of these creatures in various cities visited by him. The young man also believes that stomach trouble is the main cause of all ill health. He claims that few can have poor health with a good digestion. He further claims that his New Discovery medicine does nothing but tone up the stomach, yet it not only expels the parasites, but relieves many other ailments not as a rule associated with stomach trouble.

Little Jessie Birdsall, daughter of Mrs. Ida Birdsall, living at 2138 Carroll Avenue, Chicago, is among many relieved of a large parasite by Mr. Cooper's preparation during his stay in that city. In speaking of the matter to Mr. Cooper, the mother said: "My child Jessie, who is fourteen years old, has been suffering with this trouble for over seven years. Until this morning we did not know what the trouble was. She was extremely nervous; the least little thing would upset her; her tongue was coated, and at times she would have a good appetite, then again could not bear the sight of food; she was restless at night, had a bad breath, especially when she got up of mornings. We tried everything to relieve her, but met with no success. We were just on the point of giving up trying anything else, when we began to read of Cooper's New Discovery. Several days ago we purchased this medicine. Jessie has been using it regularly, and this morning this parasite left her system. I don't wonder that she has always felt bad, and nothing we would give her seemed to relieve her. Now that she is relieved of this tapeworm I feel sure that she will grow better each day, and enjoy perfect health. Mr. Cooper, your medicine is worth a thousand times more than you charge for it. I know of a number of people troubled the same way as Jessie has been, and I certainly expect to tell them personally to try your medicine."

We would advise anyone who has been troubled for some time with general poor health to try this great medicine. We are agent for it in this city.

NEW YALE SONG.

Award of $300 to Two Recent Graduates.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 13.—For the first time since it was offered several years ago, the Herald prize of $300 for an original Yale song has been awarded. The author of the song which received the award is W. B. Hooker, 1902, and the music is by S. D. Bingham, 1904. The words are:

Mother of men, grown strong in giving
Honor to them they lights have led—
Rich in the toil of thousands living,
Proud in the deeds of the thousands dead.
We who have felt thy power and know thee,
We in whose work thy gifts avail—
High in our hearts enshrined, enthrone thee,
Mother of men—Old Yale.

Spirit of youth, alive, unchanging,
Under whose feet the years are cast—
Heir to an endless empire, ranging
Over the future and the past—
Thee, whom our fathers loved before us,
Thee, whom our sons unborn shall hail,
Praise we today in steady chorus,
Mother of men—Old Yale.

The Women's Relief Corps, No. 10, auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., will meet tonight for the election of officers. It is quite likely that these officers together with those of the G. A. R. will be installed early in January at the same meeting.

Five centuries ago York was the second town in England, with 11,500 people to London's 35,200. Bristol, with 9,200, came next, and then Plymouth, Coventry and Glasgow.

Record rentals were realized at Yarmouth in April, when the sites of the singers' rings and minstrels' arena were offered at auction for a five years' term. The singers' ring on the central beach was let for $3,000 per annum, the previous price having been $1,500; the minstrel arena on the north beach lot for $1,450 per annum.

In the city of Manila, Philippine islands, with a population of 219,941, including 4,389 Americans, 189,782 Filipinos and 2,528 Spaniards, there were, during the quarter covered by the latest report, 1,848 deaths, being an annual death rate of 33.72 per 1,000 of population, against a rate of 30.09 for the quarter preceding.

You want THE CENTURY MAGAZINE You want
IN 1908

"The best has been none too good for this publication, which has been such an important factor in the cultural development of the American people in the past three decades and which promises to be an equally important factor in the future."
—Boston Globe

¶ In the magazine world the one by which the rest are measured has always been and is today THE CENTURY.
¶ Ask writers where their best productions are first offered,
¶ Ask public men where articles carry the most weight,
¶ Ask the public what magazine is the choice among people of real influence,
¶ The answer is the same,

"In all the feverish desire of magazine makers to cater to the superficial taste, the makers of THE CENTURY have stood firmly by the ideal of the best in 'literature, art, and thought'; and THE CENTURY MAGAZINE today is one of the finest monuments to their genius and one of the greatest forces in the literary life and culture of the nation."
—Minneapolis Journal

THE CENTURY

The best of fiction, and of popular scientific articles, the most richly worth while biographical articles, the finest and best pictorial features, will be found in THE CENTURY during 1908. There will be "The Reminiscences of Lady Randolph Churchill," the story of the beautiful American girl who shared her brilliant husband's brilliant social and political successes during one of the most interesting periods of English history.

Prof. Percival Lowell will discuss "Mars as a Possible Abode of Life"—fascinating, authoritative papers, intended specially for unscientific readers. All Helen Keller's recent poetry and prose writings—by far her most remarkable work—will appear in THE CENTURY in 1908. And Dr. S. Weir Mitchell has written the fiction serial of the year, "The Red City," a delightful historical novel of Old Philadelphia, continuing his famous "Hugh Wynne."

No magazine today publishes such remarkable color pages as THE CENTURY; in no other magazine are to be found so many illustrations suitable for framing, and really worth while. For 1908 M. de Ivanowski is painting portraits of the most noted opera singers. There will be more of Cole's beautiful wood-engravings, description and illustration of new processes in photography, and scores of pages in color, tint, and photogravure.

Subscription Price $4.00 a year.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

BASEBALL.

Harry Pulliam has been elected president of the National League of Baseball Clubs for the sixth year in succession. He received seven of the eight votes cast, the other going to Frank de Haas Robison. John Heydler has been re-elected secretary and treasurer, as was also the old board of directors, consisting of Barney Dreyfus, Pittsburg; Charles Ebbets, Brooklyn; Garry Herrmann, Cincinnati; Charles Murphy, Chicago, and George Dovey, Boston.

During the meeting which is being held in New York this week, Max Fleischman, of Cincinnati, strongly recommended that the pitchers box be on a level with the diamond, a question which is arousing great discussion, and that three, and not four pitched balls should constitute a base on balls.

A recommendation adopted is that players drafted from minor leagues be treated the same as purchased players. Waivers will then have to be sought from both the American and National leagues for men so drafted. This is intended to be a step toward preventing "covering by draft," and is in the nature of a reform.

Joe Kelley, manager of the Toronto Club, has signed a two-year contract to manage the Boston Nationals. Dovey is not anxious to trade Tenney, unless he can get a good seasoned catcher. In this case he might be induced to let Tenney go to some other club.

An important action taken at the annual meeting of the American League this week was a vote approving a suggestion that the series for the world's championship each fall be lengthened to nine games, instead of seven. A change in the league constitution designed to compel the teams to keep abreast of the schedule was adopted. It provides that games postponed during the first series shall be played off on the first day, or succeeding days, of the second series, and that games postponed in the second or third series shall be decided on the next day or days of the same series.

President Johnson's annual report which was approved, called attention to a proposal by the American Association that a club representing that league be placed in Chicago. The plan to give Chicago three clubs instead of two was disapproved unanimously, and President Johnson was urged to oppose it in the national commisison.

GOLF.

In direct contrast to the men, the executive committee of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association decided at a meeting in New York Wednesday to admit New Haven into the organization. While this latest step will enable the New Haven Country Club to come within the fold, it is not the intention of the association to extend the territorial limits seventy-five miles in all directions. The New Haven club and one or two others will be elected to membership at the annual meeting of the association to be held early in February.

In the absence of Mrs. N. Pendleton Rogers, the President, Mrs. Chas. L. Tiffany, the vice-president, presided at yesterday's session. It was announced that Mrs. S. F. Lefferts' team had won the district trophy, while the individual point prize was won by Mrs. Lefferts. The eighteen players who aided her team will also receive prizes.

W. Fellowes Morgan, secretary of the United States Golf Association, has received applications from a number of clubs that would like to hold next year's national championship tournaments. For the amateur bids have been received from the Gorden City Golf Club, the Deal Golf and Country Club, the Brae Burn Country Club, and the Onwentsia Club.

The Philadelphia Country Club and the Chevy Chase Club, of Washington, have asked for the women's championship. In 1899 this tournament was held at the Philadelphia Country Club. The Englewood Golf Club is the only applicant for the open up to this time.

REPORTERS BRAVE POLICE BOARD.

Newspaper Men of Newark Successful in Stopping Star Chamber Sessions.

When the Newark police board concluded the routine business it usually disposes of in open session yesterday and decided to go into secret conference they were surprised when four newspaper men covering the meeting refused to leave the room, insisting upon being present during the remainder of the business. Jacob Ruel, the board's sergeant at arms, was called upon to eject the reporters, but he balked. Commissioner Castle, who was the only member of the board who seemed anxious to bar the scribes from the proceedings, called on Ruel to do his duty, and President Baeder helped the sergeant out of a dilemma by moving that the reporters be allowed to remain.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

Miss Ethel Van Winkle will lead the Christian Endeavor Society meeting at the Park Avenue Baptist church tonight.

The choir of the Congregational church under the direction of Mrs. B. T. Barnes, organist, is preparing an elaborate Christmas service.

The members of the Seventh-Day Baptist church will give a farewell reception to Rev. and Mrs. G. B. Shaw in the church parlors tomorrow night. An attractive program has been provided.

John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, will hold its annual inspection at the meeting to be held Tuesday night, December 17. The election of officers will be held later.

PERSONAL.

Miss Amy Emmons, of Prospect place, is entertaining her cousin from Long Branch.

Miss Minnie Gaskill and Miss Lippencott, of Pemberton, who have been visiting Rev. Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Buchanan, of Duer street, have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Corning, of Baltimore, who have been visiting Mrs. Corning's mother, Mrs. John Valiant, of Myrtle avenue, have returned.

Rev. and Mrs. E. E. Roberson, of Monroe avenue, are spending a few weeks in the vicinity of Califon, Hunterdon county. They are expected home before Christmas.

DOCTORS TRIED VIVISECTION.

Declare Stories Grand Jury Has Heard Are Exaggerated.

New Brunswick, Dec. 13.—The local Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals announced yesterday that the grand jury has been investigating allegations to the effect that two local physicians have been practising vivisection on dogs here. It was stated by a member of the society that Paul F. Williams, a member of the society, had made complaints against the doctors.

The physicians charged are Dr. H. H. Janeway and Dr. E. I. Cronk, the latter being the city physician. Dr. Janeway has a private sanatorium here, and is related to Dr. E. G. Janeway, of New York. Both physicians deny the allegations and say the reports are exaggerated.

Plainfield, N. J., December 13, 1907.

THE PULPIT DISGRACED.

The Rev. A. W. Anderson, of Hammonton, created a sensation yesterday in the Christian Endeavor convention of Atlantic county by appearing in the pulpit with a life-saving jacket about him. A bottle of whiskey, cigarettes, dice and cards were prominently displayed from the rostrum.—New item.

The dispatch adds that the convention "fervently offered up a prayer for prohibition." It is to be hoped that the supplicants asked to be rid not only of the liquor traffic but of such sensational and notoriety-lovers as this man of the cloth proved himself to be. Is it any wonder that the question is being asked "why do men stay away from church?" when such highly out-of-place tactics are resorted to by a dominie.

THE PROPER FORUM.

There is no more appropriate place to discuss matters of local welfare than at a meeting of the Board of Trade, excepting it be before the Common Council, and we, therefore, suggest that all interested citizens attend the next meeting of the Board when the proposed school house for the far west end will be agitated. Fair play is always desirable and it would not be amiss for some member of the Board of Education to be present as a representative of that body to correct any unintential misleading statements. That a school house is sorely needed in the vicinity of Clinton avenue and West Front street, no one will gainsay, and if the residents really want one, they now have the opportunity of voicing their ideas.

THE YELLOWEST.

That arch "yellow," the New York Sun, sustained a heavy blow when Mr. Roosevelt reiterated his declaration that he would not again become a candidate for the Presidency. Nothing filthier nor more reprehensible has ever appeared in the New York Journal than the contempitible tirades that have appeared recently in its editorial columns in hounding the President of the United States. Is it any wonder that foreigners have so little respect for our people when a paper of the standing of the Sun becomes so vile?

Evidently President Roosevelt has not had his "attention called" to the discovery that Milton's Bible" is a gross fraud or else we would have enjoyed a White House cannonading of book-fakers.

An Appeal.

Christmas will be here very soon, and while you are making plans for the pleasure of your own children won't you remember the poor children, and send a generous contribution to the Charity Organization Society to be used for them. Money, toys, books, etc., will be greatly appreciated, and the committee in charge hope that the kind friends who have given so liberally in the past will not forget them this year. Money can be sent immediately to Miss Holly, No. 544 West Front street, and all other contributions to the same address not later than Friday afternoon, December 20.—Charity Organization Society.

Reception to Pupils' Parents.

Rev. George A. Warner, rector of Holy Cross church, will address the parents of the pupils of the high school and grammar grades at the North Plainfield high school tonight, when a reception will be tendered by the faculty of the school. His topic will be "Co-operation Between Teacher and Parent."

FIRST M. E. XMAS FAIR

Two Days' Bazaar Being Conducted by the Ladies Aid Society.

ENTERTAINMENT IS PROVIDED.

Refreshments Are Served and Fancy Articles Are Placed On Sale —The Committees.

Appropriate to the season a Christmas sale under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the First M. E. church opened yesterday afternoon in Vincent chapel. It was continued last night; also this afternoon and will close tonight. The women have obtained satisfactory results in their efforts to make the chapel attractive with holiday decorations—red and green and the numerous booths are greatly admired by all.

In addition to the sale of useful and pretty things for the holidays, as well as pastries and the serving of refreshments, an entertainment was provided last night and will be given this afternoon for the children and again tonight. This consists of two little plays, "The Ballad of Mary Jane," and "Three Bears." The entertainment is in charge of Miss Bertha Whitney, Dr. and Mrs. F. W. French. Those taking part in "The Ballad of Mary Jane," are Miss Helen Whitney, Arthur Bingaman, Stephen H. Tugwell and Charles Smith. Those in the "Three Bears" are Miss Irene Miller, Miss Gertrude Prior, Miss Catherine Bingaman and Charles Small. The plays are similar to the "shadographs" and afford much amusement to both young and old.

Mrs. L. M. French, as president of the society, is at the thead of the bazaar and the various committees in charge of the booths are as follows:

Fancy—Mrs. George Burgess, Mrs. James W. Jackson, Mrs. A. C. McCrea, Mrs. Joseph Yerkes, Mrs. J. H. Howell, Mrs. Henry A. McGee, Mrs. John Valiant, Mrs. Charles H. Lyman and Mrs. Jennie Hart. Handkerchief—Mrs. Eva L. Van Hoesen, Mrs. J. Hervey Doane, Mrs. George LaCas, Mrs. Andrew Small, Mrs. Isaac W. Pangborn and Mrs. William Palmer. Cake—Mrs. William Camp, Mrs. William Clifton, Mrs. David T. Moore, Mrs. E. S. Alpaugh, Mrs. Samuel Bingaman, Mrs. Charles Stone and Mrs. William Sharp. Useful—Mrs. Noah W. Pike, Mrs. John M. Lewis, Mrs. Frank W. Rowley, Mrs. J. N. McNaughton, Mrs. J. P. Humble, Mrs. Joseph Dunham, Mrs. Andrew Cox, Mrs. James L. Love and Mrs. William Sherwood. Pies—Mrs. I. L. McVoy, Mrs. G. M. Rittenhouse, Mrs. Calvin H. Rugg, Mrs. Arthur Slade, Mrs. Henry DeMott, Mrs. J. B. Higgins, Mrs. S. V. Edgar, Mrs. J. D. Spicer. Children's booth—Miss Edna French, Mrs. Eugene Edgar, Mrs. Judd Stewart, Mrs. W. A. W. Burnett, Mrs. Harry Gee, Mrs. Maurice McGrath, Miss Mattie Humble, Miss Williams, Miss Nellie Valiant, Miss Sarah Mae Howell, Mrs. J. Edmund Skiff, Mrs. William Van Buskirk. Candy—Miss Irene Miller, Misses Prior, Mrs. Stephen H. Tugwell, Miss Emily Cory and Miss Addie Coddington.

The parlors directly back of the main room are used for serving tea and those in charge are Mrs. George H. Whitney, Mrs. Nelson A. Miller, Mrs. Alexander Grosset, Mrs. O. L. Jenkins. Those who are in charge of serving the refreshments comprise Mrs. William Prior, Mrs. Nelson Hull, Miss Susie Jackson, Miss Minnie Sharp, Mrs. R. W. Davis, Mrs. Henry C. Corsa, Miss Gertrude Sharp, Miss Gesswein, Mrs. Harvey R. Thorn, Mrs. Charlotte Smith and Mrs. Arthur McVoy. Mrs. Emma Hull and Mrs. David S. Dunavan look after the coat room.

The proceeds from the bezaar will be used by the society to carry on its own department of church work.

Debating Society Officers Chosen.

Percy Mygrant was elected president of the Plainfield High School debating society at the meeting held at the school yesterday afternoon, George Fisher, vice president; Miss Louise Nichols, secretary, and Orlando Lounsbury, treasurer. The question "Resolved That Party Allegiance is Preferable to Independent Action In Politics" was debated upon, and Lindsey Best, as judge, awarded the debate to Sallo M. Kahn and Stanley Karner, debaters for the affirmative. The negative was represented by Isador Rottberg and Raymond Dutcher. Miss Mary Lock, of the school faculty, acted as critic.

Former Local Man Weds.

The wedding of Orville T. Waring, formerly a resident of this city, and Miss Jane Gertrude Timberlake, took place yesterday at the home of the bride's parents in Augusta, Ga. The ceremony was witnessed by a large gathering of friends, including several from Plainfield. Mr. Waring is the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Waring, formerly of the borough but now living Perth Amboy.

Republican Legislators to Caucus.

The Republican members of the State Senate have decided upon Thursday night, December 19, as the time to discuss plans for the 1908 organization and consider informally matters that will come up early in the New Year. It is expected that the Republican members of the Assembly will caucus the same night.

GIFT SUGGESTIONS.

Christmas giving carries with it always a thought for the comfort of those to whom we want to give.

In the calendar of sensible gifts there is nothing better than Slippers and Shoes, because they are useful. If it is Slippers, it's a gift that tells of foot comfort and long evenings before the open grate fire. VanArsdale's Slippers are practically superior to the kinds you see in many stores. People like them because they fit, and the price is right. No matter who may drop in to call—if VanArsdale's Slippers are on your feet you're all right.

Open evenings until after Christmas. Get around early and do your shopping.

COMPROMISE VERDICT IN SUIT OVER AN AUTO

A compromise verdict was given yesterday in the automobile case of Dr. Alfred L. Ellis, of Metuchen, against the F. L. C. Martin Automobile Company, which was tried before Judge Lloyd in New Brunswick. The jury, after a deliberation of a little more than an hour, decided to give the defendant the automobile, which was the property of Dr. Ellis, and the plaintiff $300 as damages. W. A. Coddington, of the firm of Reed & Coddington, represented the defendant and Senator Silzer, of New Brunswick, the plaintiff.

According to the testimony, Dr. Ellis left his automobile with Mr. Martin to be repaired, many new parts being replaced. Upon completion of the work, Dr. Ellis was notified and he came after the car. He met the foreman at the garage, who refused to let him have it until his bill of $106 for repairs was paid. Dr. Ellis wanted to know whether he was not good for the bill. The foreman said he supposed he was, but that he had instructions not to allow the machine to leave the place until the bill was paid.

At the same time Dr. Ellis called Mr. Martin on the telephone at his home and the latter informed the physician that he could not remove the auto until his bill was settled. Dr. Ellis is then reported to have said: "I was going to meet you half way, but now I won't do anything." Then followed a replevin suit for the recovery of the machine, the amount claimed being $700, value of the car and damages.

Mr. Martin retained the machine at his garage. The trial was begun on Wednesday and occupied all of that day and yesterday. A number of expert witnesses were called on both sides and the trial resolved itself into a technical presentation of facts. Counsel on both sides being automobilists there was a keen battle for points.

Dr. Ellis claimed that while his machine was at the garage he was obligtd to purchase another car and sacrifice a horse, which he sold. In view of this the jury decided to allow the physician $300 and Mr. Martin the auto, it being understood that through the sale of it he will be able to get the amount of his bill, $106, and a profit.

THE FORUM.

Two Schools Instead of One.

Editor, The Daily Press:

The article appearing in your paper referring to the appropriation of $110,000 for a school building is most timely. I agree with you that it could be best appropriated in the interest of education by providing better advantages to the children of the West End by using the amount in the erection of two buildings instead of one. The Board of Education has now acquired two plots of ground for the purpose of school building and in my opinion it would be folly to invest the money in one structure.

The children in the West End are entitled to some consideration at this time, as are also those in that section who pay taxes in support of education. Children residing on the north side of the track in that section are now obliged to cross the railroad near the Pond works or otherwise have a long distance to walk. Why should not the Board of Education consider this fact? The suggested amount of appropriation should be sufficient to build two very good schoolhouses which would be adequate for all purposes. And at any time that necessity requires they could then be provided with additions. By building one on Front street it would lessen the attendance now at the Irving School, thereby making room for those that would naturally go to the Darrow avenue school or the grammar school, and the Irving school could take its part in that side of the city. I believe now is the opportune time for a remedy for these existing conditions in education and that all citizens should impress upon the Board of Education its duty in this matter.

FRANKLIN MURPHY ON PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT

Former Governor Franklin Murphy, New Jersey representative on the Republican National Committee, discussing at his home in Newark last night President Roosevelt's reiteration of his determination not to accept a renomination, said:

"It is an extraordinary condition which seemed to make it necessary for a gentleman of the high standing of our President to declare that he meant what he said when informed of his election in 1904.

"To all who knew Theodore Roosevelt as the citizen and man of his word it was sufficient. So highly, however, was he esteemed by personal friends who number him among the greatest of our Presidents that strenuous efforts were made to induce him to reconsider his determination and even force a nomination against his will.

"As might be expected he was equal to the occasion, and, ignoring the semblance of doubt as to the sincerity of his original declaration, he repeats it. Personally, I am of the opinion that President Roosevelt's declaration in 1904 was made after due deliberation, for the very good reason that with him to think is to act."

PERSONAL.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Highton, of West Seventh street, are entertaining relatives from Stonington, Conn.

Edward Benzer, monologist at Proctor's theatre, Elizabeth, is the guest of Joseph Blatz, of Somerset street.

Dr. Frank C. Ard, of Park avenue, is visiting his parents in Westfield, N. Y., and expects to return on January 1.

Peter C. Johnson, of Plainfield avenue, near South Plainfield, who has been at Muhlenberg Hospital under treatment, has been discharged and returned to his home much improved.

Edmund H. Terry, of Watchung avenue, was out today for the first after a two months' illness with typhoid fever. He was discharged from Muhlenberg Hospital about a week ago.

THE NEW COUNTY.

A handful of misled enthusiasts, under the leadership of a Somrest county man who is at ease only when agitating and consequently in the public eye, is now seeking to interest the staid population of Plainfield and nearby places in a wildly impractical scheme to form a new county of parts of Union, Middlesex and Somerset. Nearly all of those who have declared themselves to be in favor of the plan are men whose "past performances" and present condition would support the suspicion that they are nothing more than candidates for one or the other of the various luscious plums which would be shaken from the proposed new county's political tree in the event of its establishment as a separate political entity.

The movement, having no legitimate or worthy object, is destined to die a'borning. There cannot be many Plainfielders who are really anxious regarding the success of the project, even though their city would enjoy the distinction of being the county seat under the suggested rearrangement. Moreover, since the plan contemplates wiping out the present G. O. P. pluralities in all three counties, while in the new county hundreds of Republican votes would go to waste, it is not likely that the projectors will be able to seriously interest the powers that be in the party's State councils.—Elizabeth Times.

Presented Pastor With Proceeds.

The auction sale and pie social given by the Ladies' Aid Society at the Christian church, last night, were a success, financially and socially. Just before the affair terminated, Mr. Stewart, acting for the society, presented the pastor with the proceeds of the evening.

Train Victim Buried.

The body of the unknown man killed on the Jersey Central tracks at Cranford last week was buried in this city yesterday. All attempts to locate relatives or friends proved futile and the county stands the expense of interment.

A Still Alarm.

The West End apparatus was sent out shortly before noon today for a slight fire in the house at 536 West Fourth street, occupied by H. Staats. It was caused by the overturning of an oil stove and was quickly extinguished.

—More than 200 tickets have been sold for the illustrated lecture to be given by C. W. McCutchen at the Y. M. C. A. Friday night, December 20, for the benefit of Faith chapel building fund. The subject of the lecture will be "Personal Sights on the River Nile," and as Mr. McCutchen is an entertaining speaker it should prove not only interesting but instructive. Tickets for the lecture can be secured at L. W. Randolph's drug store on West Front street.

Mrs. Florence Hoyt and daughter, Miss Ethelwyon Hoyt, of West Seventh street, have gone South for an extended stay.

Committee for the past three years, during which time there has been consistent growth in the field covered and the results secured.

The report of Dr. W. H. Murray of the board of trustees showed the broader field of charity work in this city since the consolidation of the Organized Aid Association and the Plainfield Relief Association last spring. On his recommendation as a member of the nominating committee, the following trustees were reelected to serve during the coming year: Hugh F. Fox, Henry L. De Forest, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Henry M. Maxson, St. St. John McCutcheon, Mrs. F. G. Mead, John Doull Miller, Mrs. J. K. Myers, Miss Mabel Pierson, Mrs. Charles E. Ryder, Mrs. Henry Lapsley, Mrs. Elizabeth Tiffany, William S. Tyler and William G. Wright. Mr. Murray also read the following list of members of the two organizations, now consolidated, who have died recently: Mrs. Harvey D. Burlingham, Edward B. Clark, Rowland Cox, Mrs. Alexander Gilbert, David P. Hall, Mrs. Joseph M. Myers, J. K. Myers, Mrs. Henry B. Opdyke, Mrs. A. V. V. Raymond, Mrs. Charles H. Stillman, Mrs. Van Nest Talmage, Colonel and Mrs. Mason W. Tyler. The members rose in their seats out of respect to the memory of these workers.

In the absence of the regular secretary, William B. Tyler, William G. Wright acted as secretary of the meeting. By a proposed amendment, it was decided to amend the certificate of incorporation of the society to take charge of the work of prevention of cruelty to children and to assume the care and custody of children. Several technical changes were made in the by-laws.

RULES ON HOW TO AVOID TAKING COLD.

Whether a man catches cold or the cold catches him in the form of busy microbes is less important than how to avoid the combination. However it comes about, a cold is altogether undesirable, and almost always unnecessary.

An Englishman proved to his own satisfaction that colds do not come from exposure; that, on the contrary, the trouble is caused by too little exposure, asleep and awake, to the air, the sunlight, the run and the snow, and other natural elements. Thus is the old-time, grandmotherly advice reversed.

The country idea that once was universal, and is even today very common in a good part of out-of-city life, was that you must "bundle up warm," wear a muffler, turn up your great coat collar, wear your thick woollen mittens or gloves whenever going out of doors from the end of summer to the beginning of spring, or else "catch your death-a-cold."

An up-to-date young person laughs at such suggestions today, if within the range of twentieth century hygienic ideas of no "bundling up," no great coat collar or muffler, no overcoat at all, maybe. The no bundling up idea, carried to an extreme, often leads to colds and even to the dreaded "death-a-colds." Like all good things it can be misused. A man who works half a day in a city office or in a modern store, steam heated to a high degree and poorly ventilated, and then goes out to lunch in his office clothes, may pay the penalty. It is good, undeniably, not to overload the body with clothing, but it is not good to expose the body to sudden extreme changes of temperature. Moderation is the right method. The ounce of prevention may head off the pound of trouble.

This is no place to argue the merits of woolen vs. no woolen or linen vs. cotton clothing next the skin. Authorities still offer up proof on all sides of the question. A man's personality must enter in and be considered. You can do, with no outside evidence of harm, what your office chum cannot or should not do. The harm comes when he does what you do for no better reason than that you and others do it.

You may wear no overcoat all winter and suffer no bad results. You may wear a thin cotton union suit when the motorman is scraping frost from his car window and not be cold—or, say you are not. You may wear low shoes when the snow plows are busiest. But your friend may clothe himself likewise and not only catch the cold you miss, but lay the foundation for after-life rheumatism if not close at hand pneumonia. Now, this is not to say that such light clothing in winter is always hygienically wrong—although that might be entirely true in the parts of the country that know no real winter—but it is to say that each man needs to be sure of his own personal capacity to dispense with the artificial protection that experience of generations has devised to offset the temperature changes under the artificial conditions of our present civilization.

The best way to head off a cold and what often follows is to keep your physical self in good working order through and through not just on the surface, but inside as well. If your machinery and its connections are all given proper fuel, are properly exercised and properly rested; if you will care for this machinery as well as you would care for your imported motor, if you had one, or care for yourself as well as you can for your Boston terrier, if you have one, to keep the car or the dog in good condition; if you will use common sense all around, you may avoid a cold and make a cold avoid you by giving it no soil to grow in.

FACTS ABOUT OREGON.

Oregon raises 50,000,000 bushels of wheat a year, consumes 12,000,000, and sells the rest. Total value of farm products this year estimated at $80,000,000.

There are only 450,000 acres of Oregon soil under irrigation, out of a productive area of 10,000,000 acres.

To the National Irrigation Fund Oregon has contributed $6,000,000, a larger sum than any other State.

The fruit crop of the State is worth to its growers about $5,000,000 a year. Oregon apples, pears and other fruits bring the highest prices in the most exacting of the world's markets.

The city of Portland produces manufactures that sell for $30,000,000 a year.

There is enough timber in Oregon to build a fence fifty feet high around the entire United States. It has one-sixth of the total timber supply of the country, more than any other State, and gets $12,000,000 annually for its timber products.

Oregon has 2,000 miles of railroad in operation, 1,042 miles of new roads now building, and as much more mileage projected for immediate construction.

Oregon has unlimited water power, vast deposits of cheap coal, and contains within its borders some of the most profitable gold and copper deposits in the world, in addition to other minerals. Much of the mineral producing territory has hadly been scratched.

With a population of less than 700,000 and an area of 600,000 square miles, Oregon has room for 10,000,000 more people.

Panic Prices on Watson Suits and Overcoats

Saturday morning we start a sale of Watson-made suits and overcoats that will cause the buying public to open its eyes in genuine astonishment.

Our action in cutting prices right in the season's midst is almost unprecedented, but tne panic has tied up money and our stock is many times too large.

There is no alternative. We must sell this clothing. And the only way we know to force sales ander present conditions is to smash prices so that no man knowing the worth of Watson suits and overcoats and needing clothing, can withstand the temptation to buy.

Bear in mind that this is new clothing---cut and made by us this season---with the Watson reputation and Watson guarantee back of each garment. Your size is here, and a perfect fit assured.

The Cold of Today

The Pneumonia of Tomorrow

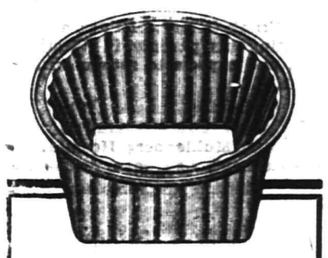
A large proportion of cases of Pneumonia are directly due to neglected colds. That is why you want to cure your cold today.

DR. D. JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT

has been successful in relieving and curing Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Inflammation of the Lungs, and similar ailments for 77 years. It is likewise a splendid remedy for Croup and Whooping Cough, and very effective in relieving the attacks of Asthma.

Sold by all druggists, in three size bottles, $1.00, 50c., and 25c.

Jayne's Tonic Vermifuge is a reliable all-round tonic. Especially good for children—a safe Worm Cure.



This is the Square Pot

Patented

Found only in

Boynton Furnaces

Did you ever operate a furnace made with the old-fashioned round fire pot, with its sloping sides to catch ashes and retard combustion; its grate bars of uneven length constantly requiring raking; its big waste of fuel?

Then you will appreciate the many advantages of the square fire pot used exclusively in Boynton Furnaces. Walls are perpendicular, instead of slanting; a touch of the shaker removes all ashes without clogging or the necessity of raking.

Gives 25 per cent greater heating efficiency than any other pot of equal diameter

This is the only construction in which the grate bars operate with even motion under the whole fire bed, giving quick, perfect combustion and the fullest benefit of every ounce of fuel.

There's but one square pot—found in all Boynton Furnaces. Your plumber, steam-fitter or tinsmith will gladly show you.

There are BOYNTON heating plants of all kinds. Ask about our Round or Sectional Boilers for steam or hot water. Also ranges.

Mr. and Mrs. Juan A. Babcock and children, of Clinton avenue, have gone to Brooklyn for the winter.

WORSE THAN THE DISEASE.

Mr. Tricure (anxiously)—My dear boy, what a dreadful cold you have!

Mr. Strongman—Yes; I get a cold now and then. My only ailment.

Mr. Tricure—But that's very wrong. I never get a cold, and you wouldn't either if you treated yourself as I do.

Mr. Strongman—Well, how, for instance?

Mr. Tricure—I take a Turkish bath every week—it's excellent for my rheumatism, I find—and massage twice a week—that's for insomnia. I rarely sleep more than three hours any night. Then a cold plunge first thing in the morning for my lungs, and a two-mile walk. I seldom take any breakfast—dyspepsia's too bad. I drink about three quarts of hot water during the day for my liver and then I use a nerve tonic every night. I tell you, my boy, if you'd follow my regimen——

Mr. Strongman—Oh, thanks; but—er—ah—I think I'd rather have a cold.

MISTAKES IN THE ENTRY.

Stung (at the race track)—Say, that was a nice steer you gave me. You said Racer would win by a block.

Bunko—An' it's er fact, but de fool owner made de mistake uv enterin' him in a runnin' race.

Easier.

This little fact doth ever balk
The struggle for the right;
'Tis easier to sit 'round and talk
Than to stand up and fight.
—Washington Star

Consistently Mercenary.

"Don't you think the public is entitled to more consideration at your hands?"

"Certainly," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "As a great business man, I should say that it is. An era of such prosperity means that the public has more money to spend, and having more money to spend it is naturally entitled to more consideration."—Washington Star.

An Edge Sale.

"That old farmer is as grum as a snapping turtle," complained the windmill agent. "I couldn't get a word in edgeways."

"Well, I got a word in edgeways," laughed the young drummer with the black satchel.

"Really edgeways?"

"Yes, I sold him a razor."—Chicago News.

Not to Be Eclipsed.

Mrs. Petro—My husband is da granda moosician. He carry da people away with his moosic.

Mrs. Casey—Shure, awn thot is not so much. Me husband carries th' people's music away.

Mrs. Petro (astonished)—Carries da people's moosic away?

Mrs. Casey—Yis, he is a piano mover.—Chicago News.

Perfectly Useless.

"What a man your father is," exclaimed Mrs. Homespun, looking up from the letter she held in her hand. "He says he has bought a French clock, and will bring it home with him. What will it be good for except as an ornament? None of us can tell the time by it, unless you can, Edith. You know something about French, don't you?"

Always the Way.

"Ever notice it?" queried the man who asks questions on the installment plan.

"Did I ever notice what?" asked the other party to the conversation.

"That the business in which you know you could make money is always monopolized by others?" concluded the originator of the trouble.

Antiquity Not Wanted.

First Minstrel—Perhaps if we'd give the public old-fashioned minstrelsy, with the old songs, old dances, and so on, we'd have better houses.

Second Minstrel (meditatively)—Well, I dunno. We're givin' them the old jokes right along, but folks won't come.—N. Y. Weekly.

Regular Caller.

Pearl—What ever became of that young man you used to like so much? The one you called "plain, everyday Mr. Brown?"

Ruby—Oh, he is "plain, everynight Mr. Brown" now.

Pearl—Indeed! How is that?

Ruby—Why, we are engaged.

Not Fair.

Little Ethel—I wish I had a new doll.

Mamma—Your doll is as good as ever.

Little Ethel—Well, I am just as good as ever, too, but the angels gave you a new baby.

W. V. SNYDER & CO.,
BROAD STREET—NEWARK, N. J.—CEDAR STREET

crowded houses have been the invariable rule and that nightly new laurels are being added to the crown of this golden voiced singer, whose designation as "Ambassador of German dialect" has proved an especially apt one.

No musical play of recent years has met with a greater measure of success than "His Honor, the Mayor," which comes to this city, at the New Plainfield theatre, Saturday afternoon and night, December 21. "His Honor, the Mayor," has a record of six months in Chicago and five months in New York, in the latter city breaking all summer records at two houses—New York and Wallack's. This successful business is not alone due to the excellence of the music, which was written by Julian Edwards and Alfred E. Aarons, but to the fact that there is laughter interspersed with melody. The comedy in "His Honor, the Mayor," is particularly strong, with the result that an evening's entertainment is provided that does not tax one's mentality too severely. The company is the strongest that could be gathered together, with such players as Harry Kelly, Madelyn Marshall, Lois Tabor, Bobby Barry, William W. Black, Hugh Fay, Arthur Ernest, Catherine Tanner, Vivian Montgomery, John H. Pratt and Geo. Fox.

POINTS FOR THE BUYERS

If you want your house papered and painted to your entire satisfaction let Charles Conover & Co., of Elmwood place, do the work. An inspection of wall paper is solicited.

The Gayle Hardware Company offer many valuable Christmas hints, and in the stock of goods will be found no end of articles suitable for gifts, including carpet sweepers, table cutlery, tea and coffee pots, washing machines, slates, sleds, etc., all at popular prices.

The season for good warm clothing has arrived and you will make no mistake by trading with Weinberger, the West Front street clothier. The goods, style, cut, workmanship and price are all right and will please you in every detail. A full line of men's furnishings always in stock.

It makes no difference whether you want poultry, game, fresh or salt meat, or fish, you can always get the best at Roth & Co.'s market on East Front street. The firm has but one quality and the prices are so reasonable that even those in moderate circumstances can afford to trade here.

ABOUT PEOPLE.

Eugene Zimmerman, of Cincinnati, is rivaling William Waldorf Astor in becoming the largest owner of historic castles in Great Britain. He has already acquired Kylmore and Kimbolton Castles, and is now negotiating for the purchase of Tanderagee Castle and of Brampton House, the last of the historic Manchaster estates.

William R. Smith, a Scotchman by birth, is about to complete his fifty-fifth year as superintendent of the Botanical Garden in Washington. He claims to have served the Federal Government in the same position longer than any other of its employes.

For the first time in the history of the Federal movement woman suffrage was accorded a place in the program of the New York Federation at Troy. Miss Anna Shaw was called upon to present the suffrage side of the question, and the anti-suffrage point of view was discussed by Mrs. Barclay Hazard.

Miss Gladys Vanderbilt has made herself somewhat conspicuous at theatre parties recently, it is reported, by being the centre of a set that chatters all through the play. Society in New York has established a precedent this winter by turning its back on the stage and talking all the time of the play, much to the annoyance of the actors.

The wives of all the candidates for the Presidency to succeed Mr. Roosevelt are profoundly interested in "American makes" just at present, a writer declares. Mrs. Knox has ordered her winter silks from New Jersey; Miss Root's trousseau is said to be entirely of American manufacture; Mrs. Fairbanks will wear only gowns made in Indianapolis and Baltimore; and it is interesting to remember that Mrs. Roosevelt always has patronized home trade.

William T. Stead, the London editor, has taken up the role of an agricultural benefactor. The means he has adopted to prosecute his benefactions is a method of bacteriological cultivation of barren land, which is said to be an improvement upon that which has been employed for a number of years in the United States.

It is said that Charles G. Dawes, president of the Central Trust Company, of Illinois, and former Comptroller of the Currency, will quit banking and finance to become a composer of music. He is a great lover of music, and has already composed considerable that has been weel received in New York and Chicago.

—The work of macadamizing West End avenue, the borough, has about been completed and that thoroughfare is now one of the finest in this section.

The attention of renters of Safe Deposit boxes in New York is called to the fact that New York State levies a tax on the contents of the Safe Deposit box of a non-resident at his or her death, which tax may, of course, be avoided by keeping one's valuables in the same State in which one resides. It is, therefore, greatly to the advantage of a resident of New Jersey to keep personal property in a Safe Deposit box within the State.

Word from Thomas Hanna.

Local friends have received word from Thomas Hanna, who sailed three weeks ago for Quibdo, Colombia, to engage in mining. In letters, he states that his trip to South America was a very delightful one and so far he is very well pleased with the outlook for "big returns" from the mines. On the way to Quibo, Mr. Hanna stopped off at Kingston, Jamaica, and he sends a vivid description of the city as it appears after the recent earthquake.

WASHINGTONS DEFEAT CRIPPLED BISMARCKS

Crippled by the absence of two of its members, the Bismarck bowling team, which has held the lead in the tourney at Campbell's since the beginning, went up against the Washingtons, last night, and dropped two games. As a result it fell back from first place and now has a record of six games won and three lost.

The only rollers on the Bismarck team were Captain Britton, Chauncey Stout and Charles W. Runyon. Frank McInerney was reported sick in bed and Tom Muir could not take part because of an injury for which he has been under a physician's care for two weeks. In consequence, the averages of the two men, less ten, had to be substituted for their Muir's was 175, but McInerney's was a discouraging 125. Despite this drawback the Bismarcks went into the contest cheerfully and the two lost games were taken from them by very small margins. They lost the first try by eighteen pins, won the second by 10 and lost the third by eight. The practically had the last game until the final frame when the Washingtons landed a triple and two doubles and crawled through.

The individual scores as a rule were low, Nash and Stout were the only men to go over the 300 mark. Captain Britton again rolled in hard luck and ended with an average of 173. Charles Runyon pulled himself up with two fair scores and "Jim" O'Keefe played a steady game. Skinner, Toense and Ortleb fell below their averages.

R. J. LAWRENCE BEATS Y. M. C. A. BROAD JUMP RECORD.

Russell J. Lawrence, the Y. M. C. A. jumper, who did 10 feet 4½ inches in a recent dual meet with the Orange Y. M. C. A., made a new association record last night at the local gymnasium, when he jumped 10 feet 2¼ inches in competition with eight other members of the local gym team. The previous Y. M. C. A. record, held by Lawrenee, was 10 feet 1¼ inches, made in the Sunday-school Athletic League track meet April 12.

The two next best jumpers in the event, which was held at the close of the regular gymnasium class last night, were W. P. Banks, who did 9 feet 3½ inches, and C. D. Burgess, captain of the Y. M. C. A. gym team, who jumped 9 feet 1½ inches. Lawrence, Banks and Burgess received ribbons for first, second and third places in the event. George L. Listman and Fritz Martin acted as judges.

Frank McInerney, of West Fifth street, is detained at home by an attack of grip.

BUILDING OF A WITICISM.

Point of Joke the Same Though Under Changed Conditions.

The Bohemian had an article entitled, "How a Joke is Made." In it Marshall P. Wilder, the well known humorist, cites this story as an illustration, of one method. "Here is a story with a joke in it about Labouchere, the genial editor of London Truth. When he was standing for the borough of Northampton for the English parliament a little girl came up to her father and said: 'Papa, who made Mr. Labouchere?' 'Why, Providence, my dear,' answered the somewhat astonished parent. 'And what for, papa?' inquires the child. Now that isn't a bad joke. It was natural, anyway. But listen to one of mine, which really has the same point, though it is brought out in a different way. A child and her mother are on the cars. Opposite them sits a young man dressed in the height of fashion. Says the child: 'Mamma, what is that?' and, as she asks the question, she points to the young man opposite. 'Hush, my dear,' answers the mother. 'But, mother, I want to know.' To quiet the child the mother whispers in her ear: 'He is what we call a dude, dear.' The child persists as usual in gaining some more information. 'And who made him, mamma?' 'Why, Providence, dear, of course,' replies the mother sotto voice, whereat the child exclaims: 'Oh, mother, doesn't Providence like to have fun sometimes?' You see, the stories are really alike. At all events, the point is the same."

GIRL KILLED A HAWK.

Bird Had Attacked Her When Driven From Pigeons.

A large hen hawk, weighing nearly fourteen pounds, attacked Miss Eloise M. Shields, 18, of Milton, Mass., while the young woman, accompanied by some friends, was spending the afternoon at the Blue Hills reservation. The party had just had their luncheon and were feeding some pigeons when the hawk swooped down and started to carry off one of the pigeons in its talons. Miss Shields quickly picked up a stone, and throwing it at the bird made it drop its prey. The hawk then attacked the girl and nestling on one of her shoulders started to beat her with its wing. After knocking off the bird with her hands Miss Shields picked up one of the tonic bottles, which the party had been using, and hitting the hawk a hard blow on its head, killed it. Except for a few scratches the young woman was not injured.

Making Use of a Friend.

A Harlem (N. Y.) resident after a busy day was seated restfully at home when the telephone bell rang, says a New York letter. "Meet me at the Waldorf within an hour," called an intimate friend at the other end of the wire; "must see you. Don't fail. Within an hour. Important. Goodby." The Harlemite grumbled, wondered why business should follow a tired man into his home, got into his boots, kissed his wife and hustled for the hotel. His friend was waiting for him in the Waldorf cafe. "Well, Jim," he said, "what is it? What's up?" "What's up?" echoed Jim. "Why, I'm as lonely as a castaway to-night. Want company—some one to talk with. What will you drink?" Jim is a bachelor.

Hurry.

To our own age belongs the credit of having raised hurry from the degraded position of a disease to that of a commercial process. Formerly hurry simply brought people to an early grave, with nothing to show for it, whereas now it is become the means of transforming peace of mind, which is a solecism, to say the best of it, into ready money. Hurry has grown to be a great fact in life. Even the fashions take account of it, until women are found doing up their hair in such a way that they may go the speed limit without fear of its coming down. And the best of hurry is that it is its own sufficient justification. Nobody expects hurry to have any particular reason behind it any more.—Life.

The Jewel of Forgiveness.

Nothing is more moving to man than the spectacle of reconciliation; our weaknesses are thus indemnified and are not too costly, being the price we pay for the hour of forgiveness; and the archangel who has never felt anger has reason to envy the man who subdues it. When thou forgivest, the man who has pierced thy heart stands to thee in the relation of the sea-worm that perforates the shell of the mussel, which straightway closes the wound with a pearl.—Richter.

Some Reason for Her Fear.

The wife of the Pittsburg millionaire reached her breakfast table in fear and trepidation. The waiting maid offered her the morning papers. "No, Marie; never give me those when John is out of town on business. I can't bear to think what they might contain." And she sipped her coffee with heavy eyes.—Judge.

The Great American Novel.

The pretty nurse had taken the best of care of the steel millionaire. "I want you to marry me," said he simply. "Why, Mr. Giltedge; this is rather sudden." "I know, child, I know. But you'll have plenty of time to get used to the idea. I'll have a fierce job to get rid of my wife."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

REMINGTON'S INDIAN STORY.

The Winnebago Reservation Choir Didn't Work Well.

Frederick Remington, the artist-author, has had about as strenuous a career as any man that ever touched pen or pencil to paper. He has spent a great deal of time among the Indians in the west. On one of his visits he ran into a story which he is fond of telling.

For some years there had been a Presbyterian mission at the Winnebago reservation in Nebraska, but there were few converts. The missionary hit on a brilliant plan. There were some bucks on the reservation who had been at the Carlisle school, where they had studied singing. He organized a quartet. The bucks liked to show off their hymns. One of them had a yellow dog that always accompanied his master to church.

At first the Indians liked the singing. Then they grew tired of it. Even the choir lost its religion. It became a trio; then a duet; finally the solo quit. A new missionary came into the field. One day he ascended the pulpit and looked around. The only sign of life in the pews was a yellow dog. Calling to the sexton, he said, "Put that dog out!"

"Excuse me," replied the sexton mildly. "I'd rather not. The fact is, he is the only convert."—Saturday Evening Post.

AUTOS AT A COYOTE DRIVE.

California Hunt Not as Successful as Had Been Hoped For.

A large crowd of San Joaquin county residents assembled at the Bollinger ranch, in the eastern part of the county, and enjoyed a coyote drive, which was not as destructive as the people of that district hoped for, as the animals kept out of sight and only a few were killed. Of late the coyotes have been killing sheep, pigs and chickens. The scarcity of dead animals has caused the coyotes to invade the ranches and give the farmer a lot of trouble. As a general rule, these animals seldom attack stock, but when driven to starvation they become bold.

It was with the hope that a large number would be killed that a general invitation was extended to the people to assemble and make a roundup. All kinds of vehicles, from the old fashioned top buggy to the latest in automobiles, were in evidence, and many men appeared on horseback and joined the chase. One drive was made in the forenoon and another in the afternoon, lunch being served between the two trips. Later another effort will be made to exterminate the troublesome animals.

Homes for Birds.

Securing as permanent homes for the birds islands and remote tracts that are their favorite haunts is a humane and perfectly feasible plan of the Audubon society in this direccently received a cordial indorsement from President Roosevelt. "This project of enlarging birdland by purchasing from private citizens breeding places in the island and coastal region of the Atlantic, Pacific and of the gulf and of providing the birds in their homes with human guardians is one that may be depended upon to provide every race among our nation's birds with ample quarters for all time. And it is only by such a thorough and wide-flung measure that this desired end may be assured. The aid of every American citizen is justly sought that the best success may attend the efforts of the Aubudon society in this direction.

Correspondence.

Swift, alluding in a letter to the frequent instances of a broken correspondence after a long absence, gives the following natural account of the causes: "At first one omits writing for a little while; and then one stays a little while longer to consider of excuses—and at last it grows desperate, and one does not write at all. In this manner I have served others, and have been served myself."

Lord Roseberry's Farm.

On his Dalmeny estate of 35,000 acres Lord Roseberry himself runs an extensive farm which is obtaining quite an international reputation. The produce is raised almost exclusively for seed purposes, and in nearly every country on the continent, as well as in several of the colonies, Lord Roseberry's seeds have been utilized by grain and root crop farmers.—London Chronicle.

Our Mineral Water.

The mineral water produce of the United States during 1906 was 48,518,395 gallons, valued at $1,574,590—a very considerable increase over the previous year. These figures cover only the natural mineral waters taken from springs having some medicinal qualities.

UNION COUNTY FREEHOLDERS.

Official Record of the Proceedings of the Board at Last Session.

Adjourned meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county of Union, N. J., held Wednesday, November 27, 1907, at 2:30 p. m.

Roll call showed the following members present:

Absent—Freeholders Donahue and Krouse—2.

The minutes of the previous meeting on motion of Freeholder Cady were approved as per printed slips mailed to members.

Communications, Etc.

From the Serrell Contracting Company:

New York, Nov. 7, 1907.
Board of Chosen Freeholders,
Union County, N. J.:

Gentlemen—In connection with the building of the culvert on Westfield avenue, Rahway, N. J., would say that we were put to considerable expense by the failure of the Public Service Corporation to raise their tracks as agreed and understood when we started work. We were assured by Mr. Hubbard that the same would be done by the time we were ready, otherwise we would not have started until such work had been completed, as we lost considerable material as well as time putting out lamps and in protecting the work already done.

We think that the P. S. C. should stand the actual cost to us occasioned by their delay and failure to comply with their promise and we would appreciate it very much if you would use your influence in this direction.

The enclosed bill is for actual disbursements and loss of material occasioned by delay, for which we were in no way responsible.

Yours truly,
THE SERRELL CONTRACTING CO.,
E. I. SERRELL, Pres.

Attached to the foregoing was the bill from the said company for expenses as alleged, in amount, $31.37.

On motion of Freeholder Swain, received and referred to the committee having the work on said culvert in charge.

Reports of Committees.

By the committee on Linden avenue bridge in Linden township, to the Board of Chosen Freeholders:

Gentlemen—The undersigned committee heretofore appointed on Linden avenue bridge, Linden township, would report that it has inspected the same, and finds the planking in very bad condition, and would recommend the replanking of the same at a cost not exceeding $500.

Respectfully submitted.
HENRY KROUSE,
J. HERVEY DOANE,
GEORGE B. CLADEK,
Committee.

Freeholder Cladek moved that the report be received and recommendation adopted, which was so ordered on roll call by an unanimous vote.

By the committee on South Broad street bridge sidewalk, Elizabeth, N. J.:

Elizabeth, N. J., Nov. 21, 1907.
To the Board of Chosen Freeholders:

Gentlemen—Your committee appointed to investigate and report upon the condition of the sirewalk at the South Broad street bridge, over the Elizabeth River, hereby reports that it has examined the same, and finds that the walks are composed of bluestone flagging, a part of which is of 4 ft. and 4½ ft. wide stone, and a part of which is of stone that is but 2 and 2½ ft. wide. A great many flags are broken, and the whole walk at each side of the bridge is very uneven, and should be relaid to proper lines and grades.

The curbing is of bluestone also, and this should be reset as well as the walks.

Your committee would therefore recommend that the walks be relaid and the curbing reset, and that new bluestone flagging be supplied to take the place of the broken flags, and of the very small pieces of flags, the cost of the whole work not to exceed the sum of $300.

J. LOGAN FAY,
JOHN ROBISON,
ADOLPH H. GRUENER,
Committee.

Attached to the foregoing report and suggesting the adoption of the report as made by the committee, was an opinion rendered by County Engineer Bauer.

Freeholder Smith moved that the report be received and recommendations adopted and it was so ordered on roll call by unanimous vote.

By the Auditing Committee.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders:

Gentlemen—Whereas, A question has arisen as to the amount that should be paid to the various election officers throughout the county for services rendered at the last general election; and

Whereas, It appears that the law regulating payment for said services was twice amended by the Legislature of this State as found in the laws of 1903, on page 628 and page 711 respectively; the former amendment being approved April 14, 1903, and the latter amendment being approved April 15, 1903; and

Whereas, This board has been advised that the payment to the various election officers for said services rendered, should be made in accordance with the following provisions, to wit: Fifteen dollars in districts where the number of registered voters is not more than 150; $20 in districts where the number of registered voters is more than 150 and not more than 300; and $25 in districts where the number of registered voters is more than 300; said sums to be paid by the ounty Collector, and to be in lieu of all other fees and charges whatsoever; and

Whereas, The majority of the bills presented to this board are for a greater amount than provided for in the above schedule; and

Whereas, This board is willing and desirous that said various election officers should be paid the full amount which the law will permit; but realizing that to sanction and approve the payment of a greater amount than is authorized by law would subject this board to criticism and prosecution; therefore be it

Resolved, That the County Collector be and hereby is authorized to pay to the various election officers throughout the county of Union for services rendered at the last general election, the amounts to which said officers are entitled, according to the number of registered voters in their respective districts as above specified; and that said payments be made without prejudice to either said election officers, or this board or any of them, so that in case it should afterward be determined by judicial decision of our Supreme Court that said payments be made were not full amount to which said election officers were, under the law, entitled, that the payments hereby authorized would in no way bar or prevent a recovery for the balance.

Respectfully submitted,
JOHN N. CADY,
S. P. T. WILBUR,
NOAH WOODRUFF,
Auditing Committee.

Dated November 21, 1907.

Freeholder Darby moved that the report be received and the resolution contained therein adopted, which was duly seconded.

Freeholder Doane said that he would vote in favor of the report, but he desired to enter a protest, as he thought the election officers were entitled to more money.

The report was then adopted on roll call by unanimous vote.

By the committee on Hillside avenue culvert, Westfield, N. J.:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders:

Gentlemen—Your committee on the Hillside avenue culvert would report that it has examined the culvert at the place mentioned, and find that it is an old wooden box culvert. It is quite rotted away, and should be replaced as soon as possible with a new culvert.

Your committee would recommend that a new concrete arch culvert thirty-four feet long by three feet span in the clear, and reinforced with expanded metal sheets, be constructed at the place mentioned, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $180.

Respectfully submitted,
JOSEPH PERRY,
BRADFORD JONES,
S. P. T. WILBUR,
Committee.

Freeholder Smith moved that the report be received and recommendation adopted. It was so ordered on roll call by unanimous vote.

New Business.

By Freeholder Pierson:

Whereas, The owners of the property on both sides of the bridge on St. George avenue, near the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, have lowered the bed of the stream by cleaning out the same through their lands, and for the better drainage of their lands and the adjoining streets; and

Whereas, The foundations of the said bridge will have to be underpinned so that the bed of the brook may be lowered through the waterway of the said bridge, and the adjoining owners, the Reality Trust, of New York City, have agreed to pay one-half of the cost of this underpinning work if the same shall be done immediately.

Resolved, That in view of the facts and the offer of one-half of the cost of the work, a committee of three be appointed, with power, to proceed to have this work done at once, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $300, one-half of the said cost to be paid by Realty Trust.

Freeholder Gruener moved for the adoption of the resolution, which was so ordered on roll call by unanimous vote.

The director appointed as the said committee Freeholders Krouse, Cladek and Doane.

By Freeholder Cady:

Resolved, That the County Collector and Director of this board be and are hereby authorized to borrow, for the use of the county in anticipation of collection of taxes, the sum of $50,000, this amount to be in addition to the amount heretofore authorized.

Freeholder Smith moved for the adoption of the re-election, and on roll call it was unanimously adopted.

By Freeholder Adams:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to look into the advisability of lenthening the bridge on Eastman street, near Pittsfield street, Cranford, N. J., the committee to report at the next meeting of the board.

On motion of Freeholder Gruener the resolution was adopted without dissent.

The Director appointed as the said committee Freeholders Adams, Wilbur and Pierson.

The following bills, properly audited and approved, were read, and, on roll call, unanimously order paid, viz:

The CASTLE of LIES

BY ARTHUR HENRY VERSEY

(COPYRIGHT, 1906, by D. APPLETON & COMPANY)

CHAPTER XX.

I Am Rudely Enlightened.

The force of the blow had stunned me for the moment. Presently I heard Helena calling for help. I struggled to my feet and leaned gasping against the wall.

"Are you much hurt, sir?" she asked in French, in a cool, matter of fact voice. She had not recognized me in the semi-gloom.

"I am not hurt at all," I replied in English. "But I am sorry, Miss Brett, that that villain has made his escape."

"I fancy I heard some one rush after him," she continued, coming to me closer and trying to distinguish my features.

"I am Mr. Haddon," I said, quietly.

She repeated the name vaguely.

"The coward," I added.

There was an awkward pause. We began to ascend the second flight of steps.

"I am afraid you are assuming a name to which you have little right, Mr. Haddon," she said gently. "I believe that you saved my life just now. I am much obliged to you."

She extended a white hand in the gloom. There was absolutely nothing of sentimentalism in the action. And for myself, I was cynically unmoved. I received her thanks almost guiltily and a little sullenly.

"I little thought," she continued dreamily, "that you, of all men, would save my life. It savors a good deal of the melodramatic, does it not? It is very strange."

"At the best it was a lucky accident, Miss Brett. Frankly, you are unhurt rather because the man was a bad shot than because of any assistance I gave you."

I spoke the words thoughtfully and quite sincerely. I knew only too well that my interference would have been too late had Dr. Sarva's aim been more sure. It seemed to me little less than a miracle that Helena Brett should be unwounded. I could take no credit for that myself.

Far from that, I should tell her the absolute truth if I were honest. I would say to her: "On the contrary, I have proved myself to be a coward again—infinitely more so than when Willoughby lost his life. Then I was exhausted, physically powerless. Now I have failed—still by the fatal three seconds—because terror held me spell-bound for the moment. It makes little difference, so far as my courage or cowardice is concerned, that you are living while Willoughby died. In either case I have been equally weak." That was what I should say to her if I were an honest man.

But I did not. You see I am frank in these confessions. Really, then, I am showing that in this instance I was even a greater coward than before. For then I at least told the truth. I did not conceal from her the hideous word Willoughby had spoken before he died. Now I was concealing from her the fact that I knew I deserved the reproach as keenly.

We had reached the top of the steps. We walked slowly toward the Grand hotel. Helena, I could see, was concerned with her own thoughts as much as was I. For a moment the shock of the accident had made her forget her errand. Now that we were near the hotel its urgency came to her with redoubled force. She was debating whether she should take me into her confidence. She was saying to herself, I was sure, that it would be a generous reparation for her unjust censure of me on the terrace of the hotel at Lucerne if she intrusted to me the deliverance of Captain Forbes.

"Why," she asked slowly, "should that man have lain in wait for me there? Was he a common thief, do you think?"

"No," I answered after some hesitation. "He is a Bulgarian, a political adventurer. I am afraid, Miss Brett, that he has had much to do with the disappearance of your brother."

She paused, startled.

"How should you know that?" her voice vibrated with suspicion.

"Because I have learned something of him at the chateau. I am a guest there." I pointed to the castle towers across the valley.

"You are a guest of that woman, Madame de Varnier?"

"Yes."

"Then, sir," she was hastening her steps, and spoke with cold hostility, "it is certainly not to you that I should be appealing for help."

"Miss Brett," I said with some bitterness, "you draw your conclusions very hastily. Is it impossible for you to believe that I wish to help you—that I wish to make atonement to you for the suffering I have caused you unconsciously?"

She looked at me intently, her eyes still wide with distrust.

"But you are at the chateau," she repeated. "You are a friend of that infamous woman who has ruined my brother. If you are her friend, how can you be mine?"

"I have not said that I am her friend," I protested quietly.

"But you are at the chateau." She spoke the words obstinately. That fact was, in her eyes, an unanswerable argument.

"Yes; and I know that Captain Forbes is detained there; I know that he has just signaled to you that fact and has asked you to get help. And now I want you to leave the matter in my hands. I demand that as my right. It is a task I have set myself. Once you said to me that I should save a life for the life that was lost through me."

"You have already made that reparation, Mr. Haddon," she said almost humbly. "Fate has punished me that I should have judged you so hastily and so wrongly."

"No, no!" I spoke in fierce remonstrance. "Will you never be just to me? That was an accident, I tell you."

"I do not like you less that you say so."

It was hopeless to make her understand now. I should have confessed my cowardice sooner if I wished to be believed. She had judged as at Lucerne. And this judgment caused me much the greater pain.

"Listen." I drew her to a garden seat. "A life for a life—that is what you said. But if, instead of a life, it were a man's honor that I could save—if it were the honor of your brother?"

Her lips trembled. She leaned toward me in her appeal.

"Oh, you would crush me with the weight of my gratitude. Save my brother's honor, and, and—"

"I should then stand equal with other men in your respect?"

"Yes," she said faintly, her eyes bright with unshed tears. "We need a friend so much now. We are in such deep distress because of my poor brother. Evidently you know of his disgrace." Shame blanched her cheek.

"I know something of it," I said with sympathy. "Tell me, Miss Brett, do I not bear a marked resemblance to your brother?"

"At first sight it is startling," she cried eagerly. "When my mother and I saw you at Lucerne we thought you were he. When we learned that you were with Mr. Willoughby at the time of his death, you can understand how bitterly we resented our disappointment. Forgive me if I am again suspicious, but that I should find you the guest of Madame de Varnier now, at this time—"

"If I am to help you, you must trust me."

"I will. I do."

"Implicitly?"

"Yes."

"Even though circumstances seem utterly against me? Even though I may seem a friend of Madame de Varnier—to be in league with her against you?"

She hesitated. "She is a dangerous woman. If my poor brother has fallen a victim to her horrible beauty—"

"I shall be on my guard," I replied lightly, smiling at her fierce resentment.

"But you will continue to be her guest. Is that wise? How can you effect the release of Captain Forbes if you remain at the chateau?"

"How can I learn the truth concern-

"If I Am to Help You, You Must Trust Me."

ing your brother, how can I do my utmost to save his honor (if it be not yet too late), unless I remain at the chateau—yes, unless I am on apparent good terms with Madame de Varnier?"

"You are testing my belief in you to the utmost, Mr. Haddon. I suppose you smooth the suspicions of your hostess as readily as you do mine."

She spoke bitterly. And if she found it difficult to trust me now, how much more difficult when she learned, not the whole truth, but a damning half-truth.

"Ah, you are wavering already in the trust you have promised to give me. Great God, you think that it is a pleasant task I have set myself? To smile on this woman, to play the hypocrite, to spy on her when I am her guest, that I may dog her, coax her into telling the truth, that I may entrap her accomplice and herself at the right moment? Miss Brett, I would wash my hands of this ugly business if I had not sworn to endure every ignominy and risk of being misunderstood not only by a man like Captain Forbes by by yourself. I tell you that I have not a clear field to carry out my plans—if I fail, or am baffled by some well-meaning intruder, I am a disgraced man. No one will believe my defence—not even you. I may even be dragged to prison as a common felon."

She placed both her hands in mine.

"Forgive me. My anxiety is so great. I do trust you. Return to Madame de Varnier, Mr. Haddon. I shall try to be patient. But Captain Forbes, am I to do nothing to help him?"

"Until this evening, no. You see, I am testing your faith."

I looked at her keenly. She returned my glance with brave assurance.

"If you receive no word, either from Captain Forbes or myself, by midnight to-night, if you are not summoned to the chateau by your brother (and that I warn you is only too unlikely), inquire at the Grand hotel for Mr. Robinson Locke. He is an American consul at Lucerne; he will help you."

"He has already helped us. It was Mr. Locke who directed Captain Forbes and myself here to Alterhoffen."

"And will you not include among my services," drawled a voice behind us, "the fact that I was so fortunate as to save your life just now, Miss Brett?"

I looked up speechless. Robinson Locke met my startled glance with cool contempt.

"That you saved my life?" repeated Helena, in wonder.

"Have I robbed my gallant countryman of your gratitude, Miss Brett?" he demanded carelessly.

"Then it was you who rushed down the stairway?" I stammered, my face hot with shame.

"Yes, sir," he said, sternly, "it was. It is not a pleasant duty to expose the cowardice of an acquaintance, Miss Brett. I could have forgiven him his terror. But that he should masquerade as a hero while I was vainly attempting to pursue the blackguard who tried to murder you—that is a little too much."

I confronted him, my hands clenched in my rage. But I did not speak. A defense was impossible. I stared at him in silence.

"I am afraid," he sneered, "that you are rather fond of wearing the lion's skin. I believe I had an appointment with you this morning at ten o'clock."

"With me!" I cried, hotly. "No!"

"Then you did not receive the note placed on your pillow last night? Ah, so you did receive it, after all, Sir Mortimer—I beg your pardon, Mr. Haddon."

I turned from him; I looked at Helena. Our eyes met. I did not say one word; I did not beseech even by a look. I had asked her to trust me, but I had not looked for a situation like this. Her eyes fell before mine and they had told me nothing.

"I shall leave you to your interview with Mr. Locke," she said quietly.

A RECESSIONAL.

(After Kipling).

God of the Nation, known of old,
Supreme, all-powerful and just,
No longer on our coins of gold
Dare we inscribe: In Thee we trust.
Lord God of Hosts, forsake us not;
We have forgot, we have forgot!

Our Fathers did not ask in vain
When, unashamed, they sought thine aid;
Now, in our day of stress and strain,
We falter in our faith—afraid.
God of our country, long forgot,
Forsake us not, forsake us not!

We bowed before the shrine of wealth
And, drunk with riches, went astray;
Restore, O God, the Nation's health
And lead it in the old, true way.
In sorrow, shame and vain regret
We plead that Thou will spare us yet.

Forgive our wilful waste, our pride,
Our foolish pomp and wicked lust;
Once more be Thou the Nation's guide
That we may say "In God we trust."
For thoughtless act and idle word,
Thy mercy on Thy people, Lord!

The New York Tribune Farmer.

When a practical farmer meets The Tribune Farmer the recognition is mutual, and they are friends for ever after. Why? Because the practical farmer readily discovers that The Tribune Farmer is a superior publication for farmers and their families and learns from its columns that everything worth knowing about the theory or practice of farming is treated by men recognized as experts in their various lines. He knows that it keeps him in touch with all the latest improvements by text and pictures and with the special work being done at agricultural colleges all over the country. His wife also welcomes this weekly visitor (The Farmer is printed every Thursday), because each issue always contains features of interest to women folk.

If you are not acquainted with this publication it will cost you only $1.00 for an introduction, or a year's subscription. Once a friend always a friend.

TERRORS OF BALLOONING.

Not to the Aeronaut, but to the Man on Earth Below Him.

It must be more than two years ago that I called attention in this column to the danger and nuisance that would be likely to ensue if ballooning became popular, but it is only recently that the public have awakened to the fact that the possibilities mentioned are likely to become stern realities.

Already we read of people quietly lounging in their gardens being well-nigh blinded by showers of sand, of conservatories being smashed, of houses unroofed and chimneys demolished, of trees uprooted, of fences damaged and of cattle injured by the action of the grapnel.

Of course, as ballooning becomes more general such accidents will be more frequent and more serious. An inconsiderate aeronaut is far more difficult to catch and control than a road-hog, because he may perpetuate his annoyances from an inaccessible distance. It is really high time—before this latest nuisance becomes so vast as to be uncontrollable—that stringent measures should be taken for its suppression.

But, I suppose till the prime minister has been hooked by a grapling-iron and dragged by the heels across a plowed field and through a couple of quick-set hedges, nothing will be done.—London Graphic.

VEGETABLES ON THE ROOF.

A Real Practical Garden Constructed on the Housetop.

Saying that the conventional roof garden was a misnomer, Mrs. Antonio Bellestri of 1,039 Hillen street, built a real garden on her roof and planted a variety of vegetables. Stalks of corn, which is only one of the many vegetables she raises, can be seen from the street, and attract much attention.

The inability to buy vegetables in the market caused Mrs. Bellestri to conceive the idea of a roof garden. Procuring several store boxes of a depth of about six feet, she filled them with rich soil and planted the seeds. The growth of the plants was watched with keen interest, and to her delight the vegetables she desired came in abundance, and she had more than could be used by her family. Those that she does not use are sent to her friends.

Several crops are raised a year, and besides corn and spices she has beans, pumpkins, squashes, cucumbers and several Italian plants that flourish well in the rich soil of her unique roof garden.—Baltimore Sun.

A Little Mixed.

"The late Marion Story, Julian Story's brother, was a great sportsman," said a New York broker. "He is a splendid angler. I used to like to hear him tell fish stories, for in his case these stories were always no less amusing than true.

"Mr. Story was once fishing for tarpon in Florida. He fished in a motor boat, and his companion was a cracker—a Florida cracker.

"Suddenly the cracker got a bite, gave a great jerk backward, and then—presto, he was splashing and floundering in the water. The huge fish had pulled him overboard.

"'Drop your rod!' shouted Mr. Story, and he started the motor, and in a few minutes reached the cracker and hauled him back on board.

"The man said, as he began to wring out his clothes:

"'What I want to know is—is this cracker a-fishin' or was that fish a-crackerin'?'"—San Antonio Express.

New Term in Law.

The plaintiff was stating his case: "Your honor, I was walking alongside of the waiting train, when this man, who is a stranger to me, and without any cause whatever, reached out of the car window and planted a couple of powerful blows upon my face."

"Your honor," expostulated the defendant, "I was so enraged by the delay of that train and the miserable service of that road in general, that I just had to give vent to my feelings in some way. I couldn't restrain myself."

"I feel for you," admitted the judge, who had occasion to travel on the same road, "but I am compelled to fine you nevertheless. That pair of hand-me-downs will cost you just $10."

What She Wanted.

Mrs. Jones—That old maid next door is the most brazen borrower I know!

Mrs. Brown—Indeed!

Mrs. Jones—Yes. Why, only yesterday she came over to inquire if she could borrow my husband for an hour to mow her lawn, thrash a man who had insulted her and discharge her cook.—Tit-Bits.

THEIR ONLY NEED.

It Was Not Filled but the Sergeant Was a Hero.

Lord Dundonald, commander in chief of the Canadian militia, recently gave a dinner at Toronto to the members of the governor general's bodyguard, the crack mounted troop of Canada. Notwithstanding his lordship's title of nobility and his high military rank he is very democratic. During the progress of the dinner he made a tour of the tables, accompanied by members of his staff, and wishing to put the men completely at their ease, made a few commonplace remarks and asked if there was anything they desired to have.

"Now, don't be backward," he said. "If everything is not all right just say so."

Of course no one would think of making a complaint to the commander in chief at such a time, but as he asked once more if there was not something the men desired, a sergeant arose, saluted and said, "We would like to have some oysters."

The absurdity of the request, on a red hot summer's night, was so palpable his lordship was silenced, and he walked quietly on, asking no more questions. The sergeant, however, was the hero of the evening for having dared to speak to a real live lord.

SOME ARE SO SENSITIVE.

The First Tall Man Couldn't See the Joke and Left.

A tall, thin man, dressed in a light gray suit, entered the hotel restaurant and took an unoccupied chair at a table near the door. He hardly had gotten seated comfortably before another man, even taller and thinner than the first one, entered and took a seat at the same table. And, to make the situation more remarkable, the taller man wore a gray suit of exactly the same shade and cut as the other.

The shorter man never raised his eyes from the bill of fare, and seemed quite oblivious of his companion's presence. The latter looked curiously at the first comer for a few moments, and then, with an apparent desire to be sociable, said:

"This must be the thin man's table."

The shorter man straightened up with a jerk, gave the very tall man a look of the greatest indignation, and exclaimed in a burst of anger:

"Well, you may have it."

With that he hastily rose and took a seat at the furtherst end of the room. The very tall man winked at the waiter, and the incident was closed.

Saw the Commercial Side.

"The late Sir William Henry Perkin, the inventor of coal tar dye," said a Philadelphia chemist, "had a singularly lucid mind. I once heard him talking about the missionary movement. Sir William had been for years a warm supporter of this movement, and he praised it highly; but he condemned certain phases of it, illustrating the phase he meant by a quotation from a letter—a letter written by the notable Capt. Davis to Secretary Washington about the convention of the Indians:

"'The letter ran:

"'If these people (the Indians) were once brought over to the Christian faith, they might soon be brought to relish a more civilized kind of life, and be thereby induced to consume greater quantities of our coarser woolen manufactures.'"

Subject to Attachment.

A Kansas City man recently wrote to a lawyer in another town of the state asking for information touching the standing of a person there who had owed the Kansas City individual a considerable sum of money for a long time.

"What property has he that I could attach?" was one of the questions asked.

The lawyer's reply was to the point.

"The person to whom you refer," he wrote, "died a year ago. He has left nothing subject to attachment except his widow."—Harper's Weekly.

Tokay Wine.

This year's output of the famous Tokay wine has been entirely lost in consequence of an unexpected outbreak of phylloxera. Tokay is made from grapes grown in the vineyards belonging to the Emperor Francis Joseph, at Hegyalja, Hungary, and it is now used chiefly for presents to other crowned heads.

FATHER A SON'S FRIEND

This Should Be the True Relation, Says Rev. George A. Warner.

HE TALKS TO PUPILS' PARENTS.

Holy Cross Rector and Superintendent H. C. Krebs Talk Borough School Reception.

Speaking in general upon the influence of parent and teacher on the character of a boy, Rev. George A. Warner, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, gave an interesting informal talk before a gathering of the parents of pupils in the high school and grammar grades of the North Plainfield schools at a reception held in the Somerset street school last night. The affair was well attended, and at the conclusion of Mr. Warner's remarks, there was an address by County Supervisor of Schools Henry C. Krebs, and later an informal reception tendered by the school teachers. Refreshments were served.

Mr. Warner especially emphasized the effect of treatment in the home and at the school by the parent. He said that the boy should be able to look to his parents, and especially his father, as personal advisor and sympathetic, tolerant friends. The father in the home should strive to gain the confidence of his boy, that he might advise the lad in all difficulties, and be is confident in all troubles. The parent should strive to see the various petty difficulties of childhood from the child's standpoint and should be always ready with sympathy and friendly advice.

The home, said the speaker, should be made as attractive as possible to the boy, and he should be allowed the freedom of the entire house. Mr. Warner said that the reason so many boys spend their evenings "out" is because the home is not made attractive enough by justifiable amusements. This home life does much to develop the right characteristics in a lad and keeps him from bad influences abroad.

Speaking of the life at school, Mr. Warner said that the American schools excel those abroad in that there is a freer social life and less pedagogic discipline in the educational institutions in this country. The relation of teacher to pupil should be that of friend rather than taskmaster, and the same sympathetic view of a child's difficulties should be taken by the teacher as by the parent. This relation of friendship between those teaching and those taught should be supplimented by co-operation between teacher and parent.

After Mr. Warner's remarks, Superintendent Henry C. Krebs spoke briefly upon the practical value of high school education. He said that it is the claim of many parents and pupils that the courses offered, such as languages and history, are not of value to the pupil who plans to go into business. But this, he stated, is not the case. Though the studies in themselves may not be of practical value, the training in systematic work, despatch and retentive memory is of great worth. These qualities should be sought after, for even the stenographer requires some training aside from the mere technical knowledge of shorthand typewriting.

MISS MAY SMITH CHOSEN PRESIDENT OF W. R. C.

The Women's Relief Corps, auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., met last night and elected these officers for the ensuing year:

President, Miss May Smith; senior vice president, Mrs. Emma K. Cox, junior vice president, Miss Hattie Gibbons; treasurer, Mrs. Annie T. Bolsterle; chaplain, Mrs. Sarah A. Mattox; conductor, Mrs. Sadie E. Baglin; assistan conductor, Mrs. Jennie D. O. Bergman; guard, Mrs. Elizabeth Naylor; delegates to department convention, Mrs. Jennie D. O. Bergman and Mrs. Elizabeth Naylor; alternate, Miss May E. Howlett.

It was announced that Department President Mrs. Elizabeth Wilkes, of Trenton, will install the officers jointly with the installation of the officers of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., Tuesday night, January 14. She will be assisted by Mrs. Jennie D. Atwood, of Massachusetts, who will act as conductor.

The corps also decided to hold a social affair on Friday night, December 27, to which the G. A. R. and Sons of Veterans will be invited. There will also be an enjoyable program of music, and refreshments will be served.

Reception Postponed.

The reception which was to be given to Mr. and Mrs. George B. Shaw tonight in the Seventh-Day Baptist church parlors is postponed until Thursday night on account of the illness of Mr. Shaw.

PYTHIAN KNIGHTS HOLD BIG DISTRICT MEETING

Knights of Pythias lodges in District No. 14, comprising Perseverance and Unity in this city; Lodge of the Castle, of Somerville, and Somerset, of Bound Brook, held a district meeting in Perserverance lodge rooms in the Babcock building, last night. It was in charge of District Deputy Edward Bowman and was attended in all by 200 members of the order.

Among the prominent officers present were Grand Chancellor Hilliard, of Salem; Grand Master of Exchequer John Patrick, of Rutherford; Grand Master at Arms Lewis Drucker, of Elizabeth; Grand Inner Guard Harry Keeler, of Newark; Grand Outer Guard P. C. Quick, of Somerville, and Supreme Representative P. Frank Shanley, of Jersey City.

Reports from the various lodges showed a greatly financial standing in each and gains in membership during the year. Harvey Smalley, of Bound Brook, was recommended as the new deputy for the coming year. Following the business session, a smoker was enjoyed, during which addresses were made by the grand lodge officers present.

The committee in charge of the meeting was composed of Joseph C. Climm, William Baker, J. E. Flannery, A. D. Pope and William Mills.

MRS. HEINISCH LOSES CLAIM.

The claim of Mrs. Virginia Heinisch, of Irvington, to $100,000 from the estate of Jacob S. Rogers, founder of the Rogers Locomotive Works, in Paterson, was dismissed by Vice Chancellor Emery in Newark, yesterday. Mr. Rogers left more than $5,000,000, the bulk of which he bequeathed to the Metropolitan Museum.

The will was contested by Mrs. Heinisch, his half-sister, and other relatives. To settle their claims, $250,000 was distributed among them. Mrs. Heinisch received her share of this, but also laid claim to an additional $100,000. She alleged that Jacob Rogers had promised his father, Thomas Rogers, to leave her $100,000 more than her hare as an heir-at-law of his estate.

In his opinion dismissing this claim Vice Chancellor Emery stated that such vague expressions of intent should not be considered or sufficient weight to deprive a legatee of the benefit of the Statute of Wills.

Lunch-Room a Success.

The lunch-room which was opened at the Y. W. C. A. because of the request of so many girls and young women employes who desire a quiet and pleasant place in which to pass the noon hour, is meeting with much success. Those who carry their own lunch can procure a cup of hot coffee, tea or soup to eat with it and for those who want lunch, home-made-cooking can be procured at reasonable prices. Some of the girls bring their fancy work which they are making for Christmas and during the lunch hour others enjoy the Christmas numbers of the magazines on the library table, and still others "eat and run," in order to do necessary shopping during the short noon hour. On Saturdays lunches will be served from 5:30 to 7:30 in the evening.

Christmas Bazaar a Success.

The two-days' fair held under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the First M. E. Church in Vincent chapel, closed last night. The attendance both afternoons and evenings was large and the women disposed of everything at good prices. The entertainment given under the drection of the committee of which Miss Bertha Whitney was chairman, was an enjoyable feature. The exact net proceeds have not been determined yet, but the society will meet within the coming week to settle up accounts. The money will be used by the society for its department of church work.

Mrs. Eliza Genot.

Mrs. Eliza Genot, widow of Francis Genot, who resided for many years on West Front street, near Plainfield avenue, died yesterday after a few days' illness. She was in her seventy-ninth year and death was primarily due to the informities of old age. She is survived by one son, Eugene Wigger, of West Front street. The funeral will be held in St. Mary's church Monday morning at 9 o'clock and burial will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

Assist at Notable Society Function.

Mrs. Eliot Cutter and Mrs. John R. Greason, daughters of Mrs. Alexander McBride, of Halstead street, East Orange, assisted in receiving at a tea given by Mrs. McBride for her daughter-in-law, Mrs. David Alexander McBride, at her home Wednesday afternoon. It was a notable society event and was largely attended.

ACTOR LOSES HIS REASON

Misfortune Befalls Paul Barnett Who Has a Host of Local Friends.

HE IS NOW IN A SANITARIUM.

Became Known In This City Through Accident That Befell Him At New Plainfield Theatre.

Through Hal Reid, the playwright, who came to Plainfield last night to witness the production at the New Plainfield theatre, local friends learned that Paul Barnett, the young actor who has scores of acquaintances in the city, recently became violently insane. Troubles of a varied nature had been preying upon him for a year or more and two weeks ago at Philadelphia his reason left him completely. It was necessary to place him in a straight-jacket to prevent his injuring himself or others and he is now confined in an institution near Richmond, Va.

Barnett became known in Plainfield through an accident which befell him at the local playhouse while appearing in Walter Fessler's production of "The Life That Kills." He had the heavy, or "villain's" part and during a stage fight in the last act with the "hero," the two men fell heavily. Barnett's left leg was caught in some way and broke with a snap that was plainly heard by people in the front rows of the orchestra.

The injured actor was removed to Muhlenberg Hospital and the local Elks interested themselves in his case. He was without money or close friends at the time and the lodgemen saw to it that he had every care and attention. Barnett was a man of education and intelligence and the kindness shown him impressed him greatly. When he was able to get on his feet and eventually secure a new position he never ceased to express gratitude for what the Plainfielders had done for him. He was especially grateful to Judge William N. Runyon, Freeholder Wilbur, Dr. Fred Hughes and H. M. Estil and never came within any distance of the city but what he stopped to see them and present them with some little token. Less than a month ago he made a special trip out from New York to give a beautiful bouquet of flowers to Miss Anna Warnock, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Warnock, who was in the theatre the night he fell and who sent him flowers and fruit while he was at the hospital.

Barnett's last visit to the city was two weeks ago when he came to see Judge Runyon on a business matter. At the time he declared he had decided to retire from the stage and had planned to engage in a mercantile pursuit in New York but that he would make his home in Plainfield. He left that day for Philadelphia with the statement that he would return shortly but nothing was heard from him until Mr. Reid related the facts of his misfortune last night. Barnett is but twenty-eight years old and has wealthy relatives in Cincinnati. His wife, who is also quite well known in Plainfield, is an actress, at present travelling with a company now in the West.

UNITED COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS RECEPTION.

Plainfield Council, No. 402, United Commercial Travelers, will hold a regular meeting tonight in Knights of Columbus Hall, when it is expected that fifteen new members will be initiated. The local council is growing rapidly and a large accession of members will be made early in the New Year.

Arrangements will also be completed tonight for the first reception, entertainment and dance to be held at the Casino on Friday night, December 20. Frank W. Weed is chairman of the committee in charge and he has prepared an attractive program. An orchestra of ten pieces has been engaged and well-known talent will entertain with vocal selections in connection with the dance.

Engagement Announced.

Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Smith, of Madison avenue, announce the engagement of their daughter, Ernstine Curtis, to Dr. Charles M. Burdick, of St. Lawrence State Hospital, Ogdensburg, N. Y. Dr. Burdick is a graduate of Williams College and Buffalo Medical College and is now on the staff of physicians in the State Hospital, Ogdensburg, New York.

ROAD CONTRACT AWARDED.

Highway from Somerset County Line to Pleasant Run, to Be Macadamized.

Flemington, Dec. 14.—The Board of Freeholders held a special meeting here Thursday, at which time bids were received for macadamizing the road from the Somerset county line to Pleasant Run, in the direction of Flemington. The distance is over six miles in length and the contract was awarded to the Delaware River Quarry and Construction Company, for $48,851.95.

The time for the work upon the new road to begin is not specified, but it is to be completed by October 15, 1908. The work will begin at the Somerset county line, by the way of the New Brunswick and Easton turnpike, and will pass through Whitehouse and Whitehouse Station and will terminate on the hill at Pleasant Run. Next year another contract will be let to macadamize the road from this point to Flemington, by the way of Barley Sheaf and Flemington Junction.

CHANGE IN NAME ONLY.

It Is Now the Bell Company of Pennsylvania.

The Bell Telephone Company, of Philadelphia, filed with Governor Stuart at Harrisburg yesterday, notice of a change of name to the Bell Company of Pennsylvania, due to the absorption of the Pennsylvania Telephone Company and the Delaware and Atlantic Telephone Company, and an increase in its capital stock from $30,000,000 to $60,000,000.

The new company will operate in Pennsylvania east of the Allegheny Mountains, and in Delaware, Virginia, New Jersey, Maryland and District of Columbia.

Rev. W. T. Griffin's Funeral.

The body of Rev. Walter T. Griffin, who died yesterday at the home of Dr. James Blake, Macon street, Brooklyn, was brought to Plainfield this morning. The funeral will be held at his late residence on East Seventh street, Monday morning at 9:30 and will be conducted by Rev Dr. E. P. Johnson, acting pastor of Trinity Reformed church. Burial will be made at Montrose, N. Y., where Mr. Griffin resided for many years.

Dr. Ard's Wedding.

Dr. Eugene F. Hoyt, of West Fifty-eighth street, announced yesterday that the wedding of his daughter, Miss Ethelwyn Hoyt, and Dr. Frank C. Ard will take place within a fortnight. Miss Hoyt is now in the South where her mother, Mrs. Florence Hoyt, hopes to recuperate her health. The wedding set for Thursday was postponed because of the bride's c ollapse following her mother's seriqus illness.

A. C. NEWMAN CHAMPION

Wins Gold Medal in Sunday School Athlete Meet, Breaking Three Records.

CONGREGATIONAL THE WINNER

With Newman's 21 Points, They Gain Silver Team Cup—Baptists Take Honors In Junior Events.

Establishing new league records in the running broad jump and quarter mile potato race, and beating the record for the standing broad jump made in previous meets of the league, A. C. Newman, of the Congregational church, won the gold medal offered for individual championship of the local Sunday-school athletic league by scoring a total of 21 points in the league track meet at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium, last night. His points, added to the score of his team, won first honors for the athletes of the Congregational church, and their total of 29½ points gives them possession of the silver cup offered by the league. In the junior events, the First Baptist church team won the silver cup of championship, the boys competing making a total of 32 points. In the contest for individual honors, L. Buching, of the First Presbyterian church team, won the silver medal for second highest total number of points, winning 5½ points in contest. James Manning, of the First Baptist church team, scored fifteen points in contest, winning the silver medal offered to the junior individual champion. E. Fountain, of the First Baptist church, won second honors with 4½ points and will receive the bronze medal among the junior athletes.

In the standing broad jump, William B. Banks, of the First Baptist church team, broke his ow record of 9 feet 3 inches, made in the Sunday-school league meet February 1. He jumped 9 feet 5½ inches. A. C. Newman, the individual champion, also beat record figures by his jump of 9 feet 4 inches, winning second place in the event. The two records Newman established in contest last night were the 440-yard potato race, which he ran in 1:48, and the running broad jump, when he cleared 16 feet 7¼ inches. Leland Manning, of the First Baptist church, had previously held the record in the potato race, which he won in 1:50 in the league meet February 1. Harvey Douglass' figures in the running broad jump, made April 12 in a league meet, were 16 feet 2½ inches, which stood as the league record until last night, when Newman jumped five inches further.

The summaries of last night's events follow:

15-yard dash (junior). Won by J. Manning, Baptist; K. Maier, Warren, second; P. Bailey, Baptist, third. Time, 3 2-5 seconds.

Standing broad jump (senior). Won by W. Banks, Baptist, 9 ft. 5½ in. (league record); A. C. Newman, Congregational, second, 9 ft. 4 in., O. Lounsbury, Presbyterian, and H. Douglass, Baptist, tied for third, 8 ft. 7¾ in.

Two standing broad jumps (junior). Won by J. Manning, Baptist, 15 ft. 9 in.; E. Fountain, Baptist, second, 15 ft. 8¼ in.; Stanley Robbins, Baptist, third, 14 ft. 6 in.

Running broad jump (senior). Won by A. C. Newman, Congregational, 16 ft. 7¼ in. (league record); W. B. Banks, Baptist, second, 16 ft. 3½ in.; Jerry Manning, Baptist, third, 16 ft. 2½ in.

Three legged race, 100 yards (junior). Won by Hillman and Butler, Baptist; Fountain and Cruzen, Baptist, second; Robbins and Hartley, Baptist, third. Time, 15 seconds.

Running high jump (senior). Won by A. C. Newman, Congregational, 5 ft. 1 in.; W. Spear, Baptist, second, 5 ft.; Charles Line, Baptist, 4 ft. 10 in.

Sack race, 100 yards (senior). Won by L. Buching, Presbyterian; A. C. Newman, Congregational, second; J. H. Manning, Baptist, and R. D. Rice, Congregational, dead heat for third. Time, 20 seconds.

Potato race, 220 yards (junior). Won by Jerry Manning, Baptist; P. Bailey, Baptist, second; K. Mair, Warren, third. Time, 41 2-5 seconds.

Potato race, 440 yards (senior). Won by A. C. Newman, Congregational (league record); R. D. Rice, Congregational, second; H. Douglass, Baptist, and L. Buching, Presbyterian, dead heat for third. Time, 1:48.

The tug of war between senior teams from the Baptist and Congregational churches, was won by the Baptist by default.

The officials of the meet were Charles B. Morse, referee; F. S. Thompson, director of games; Rev. Charles E. Goodrich, Dr. Norman H. Probasco, John H. Doane and Archibald Hacquer, judges of the finish; Physical Director George L. Listman,

KICKED DOOR PANELS OF FRIEND'S HOUSE

James Montjoy and William Higgins, two West End men, were arrigned in the city court this morning, charged by Charles Bowden, of New street, with trying to kick the panels out of the front door of his home last night. They were arrested after they had returned to the place a couple of times and had stirred up the neighborhood by the racket.

Bowden declared to the court that Montjoy has persistently annoyed himself and his wife and that he has a habit of hovering about the house at all hours of the night. One of his specialities, he said, was to stand in a neighboring yard and throw soda crackers at the windows, exhibiting several of the "missiles" to bear him out.

In his own defense, Montjoy said he had gone to Bowden's home, last night, to get some pictures belonging to him that Mrs. Bowden was holding. Higgins went along as company and from the fact that both were a little unsteady through drinking red liquor, they kicked the door harder than they expected. He denied the soda cracker throwing and also that he had annoyed either Mr. or Mrs. Bowden.

Montjoy stated that he was preparing to leave the city and to allow him to do so Judge Runyon suspended sentence. Higgins was also let go.

Tolles is the candidate for president, Winfield Scott Angleman, first vice-president; George M. Smith, second vice-president; Harry C. Runyon, secretary, and John H. Doane, treasurer. The other ticket supports Postmaster Elias H. Bird for president; E. F. Feickert, first vice-president; F. O. Dunning, second vice-president; Leon Thurlow, secretary, and Dr. Charles G. Davis, treasurer.

Annual Teachers' Institute.

The teachers' institute of Middlesex county, held in New Brunswick, yesterday, was very largely attended. County Superintendent H. Brewster Willis presided and had charge of an interesting program which treated with the more important phases of teachers' work. There were several lectures during the day and in the evening Rev. W. T. Dorward, of Stelton, delivered an illustrated lecture on "Bonnie Scotland."

Democrats to Plan Next Campaign.

New Jersey Democrats have been invited to attend a meeting of the Auxiliary Democratic State Committee at its rooms in Jersey City at 2 o'clock today. Members of the Democratic State Committee will attend, and Robert S. Hudspeth, the State chairman, will tell of his plans to build up the party for the next election.

Mr. McCutcheon Unable to Speak.

S. St. John McCutcheon, who was to have addressed the meeting of the Somerset County School Board Association at the Somerville Court House today, was unable to attend the meeting and H. Brewster Willis, of New Brunswick, spoke in his stead.

The Rev. David DeForrest Burrell, pastor of the First Presbyterian church in LaPorte, Ind., has received a unanimous call to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian church at South Orange, and it is understood there that the call will be accepted. Mr. Burrell is the son of Dr. David James Burrell, pastor of the Marble Collegiate church in New York city.

PEOPLE'S LOBBY HEAD

R. Henry Depew Chosen President of State Political Reform Organization.

LINBARGER IS ON COMMITTEE.

Plans Made for the New Year at Largely Attended Meeting Held in Newark.

R. Henry Depew, president of the Plainfield Protective Association, has been chosen head of the People's Lobby of New Jersey, and he is expected to exhibit the same amount of activity in State legislation that has characterized his efforts in municipal affairs. The organization will at once get in touch with proposed legislation to be introduced during the coming session of the Legislature.

Walter C. Linbarger, of North Plainfield, has been chosen as a member of the executive committee, to represent his home, and he and Mr. Depew will work together in looking after matters of interest to this part of the State.

In retiring as president, Col. Fordyce congratulated the organization upon its growth from fourteen members a year ago to 341 at present. The followers of the "New Idea" movement, he said, were taking up the ideas of the lobby and were taking up the ideas of the lobby and were taking the credit for originating much work which had been planned by the lobby, but he did not mind that so long as results were achelved. The complete list of new officers of the lobby follow:

President, R. Henry Depew, Plainfield; secretary, Assemblyman Edward H. Wright, Jr.; treasurer, Henry H. Dawson; actuary, Adolph Roeder, Orange; executive committee, Colonel Alexander R. Fodyce, Herman B. Walker, Mr. Whittier, Dan Fellows Platt, Englewood; Simon P. Northrup, George E. Cutley, Jersey City, and Walter C. Linbarger, North Plainfield.

At the meeting there was an address on the initiative and refedendum by Donat A. Fritsch and William Mayor Atkinson spoke on "The Efficient Development of Inland Waterways." "The Regulation of Public Utilities" was the subject of an address by Assemblyman Wright, and Mr. Roeder told of the movement for a constitutional convention in New Jersey. Alden Freeman spoke at some length on "Corporation Control in Politics," in which he stated it as his belief that the corporation grip upon the State of New Jersey was never stronger than at present and he saw no hope of shaking it off through either of the old political parties.

Lecture on Musical Composition.

A lecture on musical composition, fully illustrated at the piano, is to be given this evening in the High School auditorium. The speaker is J. Granville-Smith, recently of London, England, where he has a well known name as a composer of successful operas, as an orchestra conductor, and as a leader of large choral societies. He holds a degree in music from Oxford University. Mr. Granville-Smith has rare genius in impromptu composition at the piano on suggested themes and in the styles of the various great composers. The program includes piano extemporization on single themes, on contrasted themes, and in the fugue style of Bach. Dr. Leonard Waldo will assist in the program by giving a number of selections on the violoncello.

The Kingdom of God in Life of Man.

The last sermon in the evening course under this title will be given at the Unitarian church next Sunday evening at 7:45 o'clock. The preacher will be Rev. Edgar S. Wiers, pastor of the flourishing Unitarian church at Montclair, who delighted all who heard him here in October last. In an earnest, extemporaneous style, Mr. Wiers easily holds the attention of the auditor and leaves in his mind much worth thinking about. His topic will be, "The Divineness of Man's Incompleteness."

Inspection of National Guard Dates.

Orders have been issued by Major-General Wanser for the annual inspection of the National Guard of New Jersey. An officer of the United States Army will make the inspection and it is announced that the inspection of the Second Regiment, of which Co. K is a member, will be made between February 3 and 13 at the respective headquarters of the companies.

New Transfer Point.

It is rumored that the Public Service Corporation has made arrangements to lease temporarily one of Codington and Manning's new stores on Watchung avenue, near the railroad, as a waiting room and transfer point, pending the erection of a building on its own property on the opposite side of the avenue.

HE'S A COLORED DOWIE

Dusky Prophet Who Flourishes in this Section Harvests Coin.

HIS INCOME $15,000 A WEEK.

Founder of "Church of God and Saints of Christ" a Poor Negro Until Recently.

Perhaps few people are aware that in Newark there has been built up within the last five years a religious organization which bids fair to surpass the late John Alexander Dowie's dreams. Like Dowie's followers, the new sect is dominated by a "prophet," the main distinction being that while Dowie was a white man, the new aspirant to the title of "Elijah III," is a negro.

William S. Crowdy, of Lawrence, Kan., is the self-elected Moses of his race, guiding his people, he claims, to their spiritual salvation through the "revelations" given man by the Deity. In Newark he has 500 followers, whose temporal welfare is under the immediate supervision of a negress "evangelist," Malinda Morris, who conducts the affairs of the new faith at 216 Charlton street, Newark.

"The Prophet," as Crowdy is called by his followers, tried only once to convert New York to his faith. This was in 1903. He was unsuccessful, and after spending several months in that city left for other parts. Since then he has succeeded in the South and East in building up an organization of 25,000 followers who pay tribute, spiritual and otherwise to him as Elijah III. He has founded a new faith, known as "The Church of God and Saints of Christ," and his "tabernacles," which dot New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia, can be counted by the hundreds.

Crowdy is a full-blooded negro. He was born in Maryland about sixty years ago and moved to Kansas during the troublous times of the Civil War. There he accumulated a competence. Five years ago he conceived the idea that he was appointed by the Lord to lead the negroes from bondage, and convert the world to the true faith.

With an eye to his own material prosperity as well as the spiritual welfare of his race, he laid in New Jersey the foundation for an organization which bids fair to outrival that of John Alexander Dowie. He found the negroes of the country credulous and superstitious and to convince them of the genuineness of his appointment as the Lord's prophet he quoted Scripture to prove his credentials. The passage upon which he bases his appointment by the Lord may be found in Malachi, 4-5, which reads as follows:

"Behold I will send you Elijah the Prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." Another scriptural passage from Jeremiah, 1-5, "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the mouth of the womb I knew thee and ordained thee a prophet unto the nations." Still another (John 3-34): "For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the spirit by measure unto him." Thus, the Prophet declares, he holds unquestionable authority for his leadership.

The Prophet's headquarters are in Washington, D. C. There he is surrounded by Chief Evangelists, Grand Mothers, Sisters of Mercy and Daughters of Jerusalem, evangelists and saints, who make up his working staff. During the five years of his leadership he has become rich and powerful among the members of his race who worship him with Deity.

The Prophet says that he is endowed by the Lord with everlasting life. He will continue to live in the flesh, he says, and his followers believe, until the last day of the world, when he will be translated to the seventh heaven. Physically he will not die, and the "Church of God and Saints of Christ" refuse to believe otherwise or discuss a possibility of his death.

Next in order to the Prophet is the Bishop of the faith, J. M. Grove, of Emporia, Kan., a Caucasian without a drop of negro blood in his veins. Beneath the Bishop is the Prophet's son, J. W. Crowdy, Chief Evangelist of the faith. Evangelists watch over the spiritual welfare of the members at the different tabernacles as the congregations of the "Church of God" are termel.

Philadelphia, the stronghold of the "saints," is referred to as "Zion." There are nearly five hundred members in that city who worship the Prophet, and there is located the business office of The Weekly Prophet, a publication three years old, which has an extensive circulation among the negro race. In Virginia, Crowdy has over a thousand followers. The Old Dominion is designated as "The Land of Canaan." The Weekly Prophet is issued every Friday and is a four page sheet filled largely with pictures of the negro leaders of the movement. Conspicuous in every edition is a cut of the Prophet.

Subscription to The Weekly Prophet is compulsory upon the "saints." The "saints" are also assessed $1 each every second Sunday for "dues" to the Prophet. The publication is

TO UNVEIL MEMORIAL TO MGR. DOANE, DEC. 26

The arrangements committee for the unveiling of the Doane memorial statue in Rector Park, in Newark, set the date for the ceremonies for 2 o'clock on the afternoon of December 26 at its meeting held in the Newark Board of Trade rooms Thursday.

The program will be as follows: Oration by Congressman R. Wayne Parker, address by Governor-elect John Franklin Fort, opening prayer by the Right Rev. John J. O'Connor, adress by Rabbi Joseph Leucht, address by the Rev. Louis Shreve Osborne, presentation by former United States Senator James Smith, Jr., acceptance by Mayor Jacob Haussling.

During the meeting a suggestion was made by Senator Smith that Mayor Haussling be asked to issue a proclamation requesting such business houses of Newark as could do it without great loss to close during the exercises. Monsignor Doane, it was pointed out, was one of the leaders in the movement to have the stores closed at noon on Saturday. It was thought that both the Mayor and the employes would be glad to accept the suggestion.

CHANGES IN THE DOUBLE EAGLE TO BE MADE.

Changes are being made in the new St. Gaudens double eagle, the coinage of which is to be resumed at the Philadelphia mint. The coins will be somewhat modified from the first lot of 8,000 coined, which are now commanding a premium. These modifications principally consist of the elimination of the much-discussed sharp edge, which made the gold pieces hard to stack; the substitution of figures for the Roman numerals, and a slight lowering of the relief work.

Because of the large demand for the St. Gaudens gold piece, the Sub-Treasury has already placed an order with the Mint for a supply. The first consignment, it is expected, will arrive today. It is probable that a limit will be placed on the number of the coins to be allotted to banks and individuals.

—All of the men were laid off in the foundry at the Pond Machine Tool Works yesterday, until the first week in January. According to the notice posted the short-time scheduled will then be continued.

devoted almost exclusively to printing reports from various "tabernacles," all of which are paid for by the congregations reported. The paper sells for five cents a copy.

Curious to a remarkable degree the rites and customs of the new church. Following the old Hebrew custom, its members celebrate Saturday as the Sabbath. Observation of the Sabbath day begins with sundown Friday evening and lasts until sundown Saturday. In the interval no member of the church may engage in any commercial pursuit, nor spend any money, except for the Weekly Prophet. Street cars are tabooed, and unless railway ticket has been purchased previous to sundown Friday, no devout follower of the Prophet will buy one.

On Saturday no "saint" will work. At 8 o'clock Friday night the congregation assembles for worship, which continues until about midnight. At 9 o'clock the following morning worship is resumed and kept up until sundown.

Followers of the Prophet salute each other as "Saint Emma" or "Saint Sarah," as the case may be. This is done, it is said, because it is written in the Bible that there are but two classes of persons, saints and sinners. As the Prophet's people are not sinners, the appellation is forced upon them. The church services open with a blast from a trumpet, followed by singing. Only the choir sings. There is no organ or other instrumental music, as the "saints" have adopted the system of 600 years ago, claiming that the Scriptures forbid any but vocal music.

The constitution of the church provides that "every member of each tabernacle shall bring tithes if possible on the first day of the week (Saturday, pay day), as it is written, 'Shall a man rob God?' We also demand by the Word of God that every member of each tabernacle, both great and small, shall bring all the tithes into the storehouse." Once a member, always a member, is the dictum of the constitution, which says: "When anyone has once become a member of the Church of God and Saints of Christ, no one has the right to erase his or her name from the church records, as God Himself will attend to that in due time, if necessary." The constitution also provides that every minister must be the husband of one wife, but makes no reference to plural wives.

When a member is received into the church it is the signal for general rejoicing. A public confession of faith is first made by the candidate, followed by a complete immersion, usually in a stream. Afterward, unleavened bread and water, signifying the body and blood of Christ, is given. The next step is the washing of the feet of the newly created "saint" by the minister, who also repeats the Lord's Prayer and breathes upon the forehead of the new member. Then ensues a rite borrowed from the early Christians. The elder commences the performance of the rite by kissing the new "saint," whose spiritual welfare has been committed to his charge. After the congregation files by in an osculatory procession. If, perchance, some member may be absent, the kiss is given as soon afterward as the two may meet.

An auxiliary of the "Church of God" is known as the "Daughters of Jerusalem and Sisters of Mercy." This is composed of female negro "saints" who work for the advancement and spread of the religion. The practical side of the religion has been equaled only by John Alexander Dowie. In every city where a tabernacle is located there is a "Church of God Cash Grocery Store," and usually a "Church of God Cafe" and a "Church of God Laundry," followed in some instances through the other trades, such as barber shops, shoemakers and notion stores. Advertisements of these "Church of God" establishments are to be found in the Weekly Prophet, which is published at 1420 Fitzwater street, Philadelphia.

There is no church of the Prophet's founding in New York, although for some time an attempt was made by several of the faithful to hold services on Sixty-second street. This, it is said, was finally abandoned. At Plainfield, Newark, Camden, Jersey City and Albany the religion flourishes. In Newark the congregation is committed to the care of Malinda Morris, who also conducts the "Church of God Cash Grocery Store," located at 216 Charlton street.

As evangelist of one of the largest congregations of the faith, over 500 members being enrolled, Malinda Morris ranks high in the councils of the church. Possessing remarkable business acumen, the negress has been most successful in her field. She has been with the Prophet since he "came out of the West," five years ago. At her "Church of God Cash Grocery," as in other cities, every "saint" is compelled to purchase all that he or she may require for food. The last report from this evangelist to the Prophet stated that goods to the amount of $4,164 had been sold in three months, and the stock on hand was valued at $1,400.

One of the customs of the church, borrowed from the Jews, is the adoption of the Hebrew calendar. The twelve months are designated Abib, Zif, Sivan, Thamuz Ab, Elul, Ethanim, Bul, Chisleu, Tebeth, Sebat and Adar. The year commences with April. The day is divided into twelve hours, commencing with 6 o'clock a. m., and members in speaking of the time would refer to 11 a. m. as the fifth hour, and so on.

The Prophet's income is estimated to amount to $15,000 weekly, $12,500 of which is said to come from the offerings of $1 by each of the 25,000 members every other week. The Weekly Prophet and the "Church of God" commercial enterprises, together with the Prophet's share of the tithe offering of the "saints," make up the remainder.

Mrs. C. Rosseter, of 127 Watchung avenue, Plainfield, N. J., says: "Years ago I had backache and headaches, and was troubled also from attacks of rheumatism. On beign advised that Doan's Kidney Pills were good for such troubles, I got a supply at Randolph's pharmacy, and found relief soon after I began using them. I now keep them in the house, and use them whenever I feel a twinge of pain in the back or any other symptom of kidney trouble, and it only requires a few doses to chase the pain away. I especially recommend them for rheumatic pain, for my system seemed to be filled with it before I used the remedy."

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

BASEBALL.

The National League baseball magnates are making the very best of their time while the annual session is being held in New York. On Thursday, George Dovey, of Boston, presented his resolution regulating the length of the lists of reserve players of the two big leagues and it was resolved to have a conference with the American League on this subject at the spring meetings. If the American League is willing the plan will go through.

There is little doubt that the world's series after this will consist of the best five in nine games instead of the best four in seven. The American League has expressed itself as favorable and yesterday Charles Murphy, of Chicago, with whom the idea originated, brought it up before the National League, which also approved it. Murphy also recommended that the players share in the receipts of the first five games instead of the first four, as at present. The matter will have to come up before the national commissison for final action.

It was resolved to incorporate the Fleischmann resolution in the constitution. The Fleischmann measure deals with discipline for rowdyism on the ball field and gives the president full power to take action in all cases except those involving expulsion. Heretofore it has been in the rules, but not in the constitution.

Deals were again at a standstill Thursday. It appears that those having trades to make are all waiting to see what somebody else is going to do. Fred Tenney told the Pittsburg folks he would like to play with them and there was a short talk between Dovey and Dreyfuss. An exchange sending Tenney to Pittsburg is among the possibilities, it depending somewhat on what Pittsburg has to offer. Likewise Tommy Sheehan, the third baseman, will go from Pittsburg to Brooklyn if Brooklyn can furnish a quid pro quo. Pittsburg isn't averse to taking a pitcher.

The New York club was very anxious to make a deal with Cincinnati, offering Bresnahan, Dahlen or Hannifan and Browne for Lobert and Schlei. Herrmann considered for a long time, finally said no and the trade is off.

FOOTBALL.

Real football was played at Columbia Thursday afternoon for the first time since President Butler put the ban on the sport over two years ago. All Columbia turned out to see the game, an interclass contest between the sophomores and the freshmen, which the second year men won by the score of 5 to 0. When the two elevens lined up on South Field about 2,000 spectators were gathered on the side lines and made one recall the old days when football was one of Columbia's varsity sports. The exhibition of football was hardly up to varsity standards, as both teams played raggedly, although they put lots of spirit into their playing.

Before and after the game there were parades up and down the campus, and even up to Dr. Butler's office, where a halt was made, but the president did not appear. There seemed to be a general impression in the minds of the students that President Butler had privately intimated that he was just putting them to a test and that if they proved that they could support class teams they would then get another chance to have an intercollegiate team.
